Pups to get their stroll on

BY MAX JAEGER

Could your pooch be America's Next Top Mongrel?

The Third Avenue Summer Stroll is looking for a few good dogs for its first-ever doggie talent show on July 18. Canine contestants don't exactly have to save Jimmy from a well, but they should at least know how to work a crowd, one organizer said.

"I'm not looking for super dog, I'm looking for a dog that would make the crowd laugh," said Derbra Capone, who owns Third Avenue's Debra Rose Beauty Supplies and is organizing the show.

The competition promises prizes and glory for precocious pups who put on a good performance, Capone said.

The talent show is the latest addition to the ever-growing Bay Ridge street fest, which started in 2011 and has picked up steam in Continued on page 15

HISTORIC CHURCH TOCLOSE Prayer house of generals to be shut in September

BY MAX JAEGER The Church of Generals is being decommissioned.

The congregation at St. John's Episcopal Church in Bay Ridge is decamping from the building where Robert E. Lee and Thomas "Stonewall" Jackson once worshipped and combining forces with Christ Church, the priest-incharge announced after services on June 29. A lay leader said the news was not exactly a shock.

INSIDE ANGELS IN THE 'SEINFELD' Fans of '90s TV show flock to MCU Park for a sitcom celebration

BY MAX JAEGER

Nice game, pretty boys! The Cyclones may have gotten destroyed by the Aberdeen Ironbirds on Saturday, losing 18-2, but fans still managed to win big with a "Salute to Seinfeld Night," coming from far and wide to celebrate the Mini-Mets and the 25th birthday of the "show about nothing."

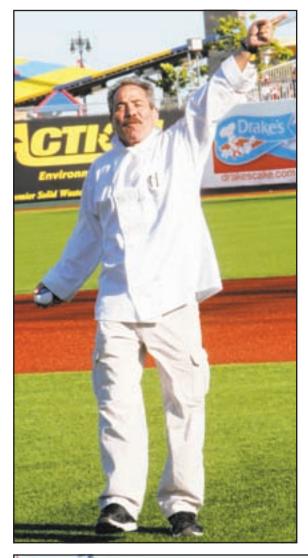

"It was the greatest thing ever," said Jamie Sclafane, who traveled from New Jersey and won an "Elaine Dancing Contest."

The evening was a love letter to the show, said MCU Park spokesman Billy Harner. To mark the occasion, the park - renamed Vandalay Industries Park for the evening – pulled out all the stops, he said. Early-arriving fans were handed Keith Hernandez bobble head toys, batters warmed up in puffy pirate shirts, Frosted Flakes fanatics gorged on Jerry's go-to snack during a cereal-eating contest, and the Soup Nazi himself threw out one of 13 ceremonial first pitches.

"I loved the marble rye fishing contest," said Andi D'Angelo, who explained that teams tried to hook loaves on the field from the stadium balcony in homage to a breadburgling ploy that Costanza and Seinfeld bungled in an episode called "The Rye."

The theme night is one of many in the Cyclone's schedule (see for instance the zombie brains-eating contest, facing page) but it stands out for fans who can't get enough of the hit '90s television show.

"I heard about it a month ago, so I immediately told my husband that we had to get tickets," D'Angelo said. "We showed up at 10 am and waited all day to get in."

Gorging on gray matter

BY MAX JAEGER

Now that's brain food. Eight ghoulish gourmands competed in a zombie-themed braineating contest in Coney Island on July 2. Despite the major gross-factor, one contestant said the fare was fairly palatable — up until a point.

"The crunchy outside and the creaminess of the brain was good at first, but after a while you had to gag," said Richard Delgado.

Delgado came for the show, but organizers headhunted him when they needed another competitor, he said.

"They just dragged me out of the audience," said Delgado, who happens to have eaten brains on three other occasions. "I was kind of hungry at the time, too, so I was trying to figure out what to eat anyway."

Despite downing a pound of the boiled, battered, and fried gray matter, Delgado was not crowned the big cheese of head cheese.

The event was part of a larger zombie crawl, which included a party at Sideshows by the Seashore and a planned shuffle around the MCU Park bases that died after officials suspended the game on account of rain.

The 'Jaws' of wife!

Wiener woofer Joey Chestnut proposes before dog-downing contest

BY NATHAN TEMPEY

Will you marry meat? That was the question popped by hot-dog-eating legend Joey "Jaws" Chestnut on Friday when he proposed to girlfriend and fellow competitive eater Neslie Ricasa less than an hour before scarfing down 61 wieners and buns in 10 minutes to win his eighth straight Nathan's Famous Hot Dog Eating Contest in Coney Island.

Ricasa said "yes" and Chestnut beat out upstart and fellow Californian Matt "Megatoad" Stonie after breaking away in the final minute of a neck-and-neck competition. Chestnut said it would never have been close had it not been for the rain. "I could never find my rhythm, so it was just a dogfight the whole time," Chestnut told the television cameras after falling way short of last year's record of 69.

Stonie stalled in the closing moments, finishing at a mere 56 hot dogs and buns after matching Chestnut frank for frank for most of nine minutes.

Audience members who braved the rain to watch the gladiatorial gluttony cheered the feats, though one got ill thinking of having to foot the bill for Chestnut's intake.

"I'm just glad I don't have to take him to lunch," said Frank Concerto, a Chestnut fan.

Others in the crowd said there was nowhere more patriotic in the country to be.

"It's not much more American than that," said Dan Mills, who traveled from Washington, D.C. to see the scarf-off.

Chestnut's fiancee Ricasa downed just 10 dogs, trailing the pack in the women's division, which was rocked by an upset when Miki Sudo downed 34 dogs and buns to defending three-time champ Sonya "The Black Widow" Thomas's 27 and three-quarters.

The defeat must have been hard for Thomas to swallow after putting away a record 45 last year.

BOMBS BURST: (Above and center) The Macy's July 4 fireworks

Having a blast back in Brooklyn

BY MATTHEW PERLMAN It came back with a bang.

Brooklynites reclaimed their front-row seats for the Fourth of July fireworks show last Friday night, lining the waterfront and packing rooftops across the borough for a glimpse of bombs bursting in air over the East River for the first time in five years.

This year's show included a special centerpiece

— the Brooklyn Bridge but the pyrotechnic barges were moved from between it and the Manhattan Bridge to the harbor-side of the city's most famous span due to concerns about a rip current, police said.

More than 40,000 elegant explosives were shot off for the occasion, from the barges and the bridge. It was the first time in 19 years that the Brooklyn Bridge has been a part of the show, which Macy's first staged for the nation's bicentennial in 1976.

A special musical score created for the 25-minute show celebrated the 200th anniversary of "The Star-Spangled Banner." It included a rendition of the national anthem recorded by Idina Menzel, best known for singing the "Frozen" song "Let It Go," which was written by a couple of Park Slopers during a flight of fancy in Prospect Park.

The show's return to the East River was long anticipated. The display decamped for the Hudson River in 2009 to celebrate the 400th anniversary of that distant river's discovery. Local pols pleaded with the retail giant and the city to bring it back to the borough with the strongest link to the Revolutionary War the following year, but were not heard until now.

Toddler found dead in Prospect Park Lake

BY NOAH HUROWITZ

A family picnic in Prospect Park turned tragic on Saturday when a toddler drowned in the lake after disappearing with a cousin.

Police scuba divers found the body of Ruhshona Kurbonova, 2, in a wooded area of Prospect Park Lake on Saturday evening, ending a five-hour search, according to an NYPD spokeswoman.

The two children apparently strayed from the gathering and headed toward the water, where a family strolling in the park found Kurbonova's 3-year-old cousin, cops stated. The older child was wet and covered in the green algae found on the edge of the lake near the boathouse, police said.

A 911 caller reported the other child missing around 1:10 pm, shortly after the cousin was found, police said. Officers fanned out across the greensward on foot and bicycle, and a police scuba-diving team began searching the lake. Divers found the 2-year-old's body at about 6:05 pm, police said, and the medical examiner's office determined she drowned, an office representative said.

Kurbonova's inconsolable mother, an immigrant from Uzbekistan, according to news reports, had to be carried off on a stretcher following the discovery. Kurbonova was the youngest of four, and the family's only girl, a relative told reporters.

Has Nothing Helped your Knee and Shoulder Pain? You Should Read This

Did you have surgery for your chronic knee and shoulder pain but did not obtain any relief? Did you have synvisc or hyalgan injections into your knee joint without relief? Did you have medication and physical therapy and nothing has helped?

Here's good news. There is a revolutionary non-surgical treatment called prolotherapy that has been proven to be 80% successful with these types of chronic pain. When knee or shoulder pain does not respond to usual treatments, the most likely reason is because the real cause of pain is the weakened or torn ligaments and tendons. Ligaments and tendons are strong fibers that support and stabilize the shoulder and knee.

It is easy to find out if your knee or shoulder problem is due to weakened or torn ligaments or tendons. Press your knuckle on the inside of your knee beginning just above the knee going to below the knee. If it hurts a lot, then most likely, the tendons and ligaments are torn. You can do the same procedure in the front and back of the shoulder. If it really hurts when you press your knuckle on the knee and shoulder, then you are a good candidate for prolotherapy.

Prolotherapy is also used to treat chronic pain in the elbow, ankle and wrist (carpal tunnel). It is an excellent treatment for "whiplash" injuries and headaches following car accidents. Prolotherapy has been used extensively for chronic back and neck pain.

Prolotherapy is a treatment that increases blood flow to the damaged tendons and ligaments and stimulates repair and healing. If done by a doctor well experienced in prolotherapy, it is a simple and safe treatment with a very high permanent success rate.

Dr. George Stuart Hackett, an orthopedic surgeon, started prolotherapy in 1939. Dr. Hackett, dubbed as the "Father of Prolotherapy", had treated about 1,600 patients in a period of 19 years. Eighty two percent of these patients obtained good permanent relief.

A scientific study done at the Samsun Medical Clinic and University of California at San Diego was published in the Journal of Spinal Disorders in 1993. It showed prolotherapy to have an amazing 87% success rate.

Before you, your family and friends undergo surgery for chronic knee or shoulder pain, you should check out prolotherapy. To learn more about prolotherapy, go on www.yourprolo. com, Facebook/ Dr.Castillo's Pain Relief Center or call A.N.L. del Castillo, M.D. at 718-966-8120.

Dr. Castillo is the most experienced board certified pain management specialist in Brooklyn and Staten Island with 33 years experience in this field.

His office is located at 9731 4th Avenue, Brooklyn and 126 Wieland Avenue, Staten Island.

Tears and prayers for slain Israeli teens

BY VANESSA OGLE About 300 people came to the memorial for three slain Israeli teenagers at the Ocean Avenue Jewish Center on July 2.

The teenagers, whose bodies were found last Monday, were the focus of several "bring back our boys" events around Brooklyn while they were considered missing — including a rally at Sheepshead Bay's Holocaust Memorial Park and in Midwood at J. Reznik Studios, where community members painted a wall that has since become a memorial.

At Wednesday's memorial, the synagogue placed candles behind name cards for the teenagers — Eyal Yifrach, Naftali Fraenkel, and Gilad Shaer — which will burn for a week, the traditional Jewish mourning period. "The synagogue is keeping these candles lit for the entire week of Shiva," said Rabbi Melvin Burg, who spoke at the memorial.

The nearly hour-long program, filled with a variety of speakers, songs, and prayers, didn't end when the ceremony concluded. Attendees called Burg later that night to tell him how moved they were with the program, calling it a powerful experience.

"I was on the phone until 12:30 in the morning," said Burg.

The crowd included a variety of age groups and included people from outside the congregation.

"It was a totally mixed crowd — old, young," said Burg. "We felt this was an issue where all walks of Jewish lives came together to pray for these children."

MOURNING: Members of the synagogue's congregation said a prayer for the three Israeli teenagers at a memorial service held at the Ocean Avenue Jewish Center on July 2.

Knife of you to call

A brute with a blade stole a man's smartphone at knifepoint at the corner of Fourth Avenue and Bay Ridge Avenue on June 30.

The man was standing at the corner between 12:30 am and 12:45 am when the perp whipped out a knife and put it to the man's throat before slipping an LG L9 phone from the victim's pocket, police said.

Gadget grabber

A burglar stole $4,000 worth of gizmos from a car parked on 71st Street sometime between June 28 and June 30.

The owner of a 2013 Subaru parked his ride between 13th and 14th avenues in Dyker Heights at 7:30 am that Saturday.

When he returned at 9 am on Monday, he found his thermal imaging camera, moisture meter, thermal hydrometer, floor meter, digital measurer, and three pairs of sunglasses had been taken by a passerby.

Purse pinched

A thief swiped a purse from a parked car on Fourth Avenue on June 30.

The victim parked her vehicle near 99th Street in Bay Ridge at 11:30 am, and when she came back at 1:30 pm, she realized someone had taken her Coach purse, a ring, a hard drive, $500, and her credit card, police said.

The total value of the stolen goods was estimated at $1.315, reports state.

Saws swiped

A burglar broke into an 82nd Street residence and stole $3,293 worth of power tools sometime between June 28 and June 30.

The victim left the building, which sits between 11th and 12th Avenues in Dyker Heights, at 1:30 pm that Saturday, but when he came back at 8 am the following Monday, he found that someone had entered through the basement and made off with the tools, law enforcement sources said.

Enjoy your summertime tomorrow—treat your allergies today

BY JACK RYAN

This probably won't come as a surprise to many, but the heavy rains of April not only brought May flowers, they are also making life miserable for people who suffer from allergies.

"Fortunately you don't have to resign yourself to living with summer days marred by watery eyes, sinus congestion, runny nose, sneezing, coughing, headaches, and itchy skin," says Brooklyn's Dr. Zhanna Tsukerman.

"Yes, this allergy season has been particularly bad because of record rainfall," says the physician, who treats all types of allergies in her Brooklyn office. "Right now the problem is coming mainly from the trees. The pollen season starts in April. It continues to build until it peaks in late May or early June, when the buds die from heat or lack of rain." Afterwards, she says, "the allergens will come from a variety of plants and weeds, especially in an urban area like Brooklyn."

People may also be allergic to dust and mold inside their homes, which alone can make their lives miserable. However, the solution to your woes is within reach. "The good news is that the allergies are almost always treatable," she says.

But before the problem can be managed, Dr. Tsukerman needs to determine exactly what the patient is allergic to.

"This can be done through skin tests. In a majority of cases I'll have results in 15 minutes or less," she says. "After that, I create a customized serum right here in my office that will allow the patient to develop the antibodies that will help him or her fight off the effects of the allergy. It's like a small vaccination."

Dr. Tsukerman says she has repeatedly helped patients "who had resigned themselves to living their lives with allergies."

Once the serum is prepared, the patients return for weekly shots until they develop the necessary antibodies.

Dr. Tsukerman says this approach has been 80 percent successful. And, she says, most insurance plans cover the allergy treatments she offers. That sounds a lot better than relying on a constant supply of expensive overthe-counter remedies that treat the symptoms of allergies and not the causes.

The doctor said that since she opened her office on Ocean Parkway, she has been getting a great deal of positive feedback from her many faithful patients.

Dr. Zhanna Tsukerman

"It seems like everybody has allergies right now. Fortunately, I can help them. I'm happy once my patients feel better," she says.

In her Brooklyn office, Dr. Tsukerman combines a commitment to old-fashioned customer service with the very latest in medical technology. Her guiding philosophy is "patient first." She wants to help her patients "selfheal." According to Dr. Tsukerman, her job is not only to diagnose the problem. Rather than focusing on symptoms, her goal is to work with the patient first to find the source of the illness.

Dr. Tsukerman is now one of the few doctors in the area who have been trained to use Botox injections to treat some very difficult medical conditions.

"Botox (onabotulinumtoxin A) is no longer used solely for cosmetic purposes," she says. For example, she has successfully used Botox to treat chronic migraine headaches. The medicine can be injected into patients 18 years or older who have headaches lasting four or more hours for 15 days each month, especially when traditional and more expensive medications have failed.

She has also used Botox to treat hyperhidrosis, a condition in which patients have severe underarm sweating that cannot be effectively dealt with by antiperspirants. Botox is now also used in treating bladder problems as well as neck pain and muscle spasms.

Dr. Tsukerman's online ratings on Yelp and other websites indicate that her patients are more than satisfied with the attentive care they have come to expect.

ARREST IN FATAL HIT-AND-RUN

BY VANESSA OGLE

The driver who mowed down a family in Flatlands last Wednesday afternoon, killing a 12-year-old girl and leaving her mother and 9-year-old sister in critical condition, turned himself in just hours after authorities released his picture to the media, according to police.

Police say Robert Decarlo of Gravesend was driving a stolen Dodge Caravan on Flatlands Avenue towards Canarsie when he jumped the curb and struck the family between 46th Street and Schenectady Avenue at 4:42 pm July 2.

He then allegedly fled the scene of the crime on foot, leaving the wrecked van perched on a fire hydrant.

The three victims were rushed to Kings County Hospital Center, where 12-year-old Joey Sellers died during the night, and her mother and sister remain in critical condition.

Police identified Decarlo as the alleged driver the next day and released a photo of the 26-year-old suspect, asking the public to help track him down.

A few hours later, Decarlo walked into the 62nd Precinct station house in Bath Beach and surrendered.

"He turned himself in," a police spokesman said.

Decarlo already has a long rap sheet — including assault, robbery, and criminal possession of stolen property — according to the District Attorney's Office. Charges from the July 2 incident include manslaughter, criminally negligent homicide, leaving the scene of a fatal accident, grand larceny, reckless endangerment, speeding, and running a red light.

Decarlo's attorney did not returned a call for comment.

BUSINESS, BROOKLYN STYLE - ADVERTISEMENT Good Fortune Adult Social Day Care giving caregivers a break

BY TIPPY FELZENSTEIN

I was in denial, and convinced myself that my mother only forgot a few things, and if only she ate right, or was approached the correctly, she would be fine. That was what I wanted to believe and that was what I convinced myself was the truth.

Her doctor said she was suffering from severe dementia. but I couldn't possibly believe him. What did he know, I thought, he doesn't know my mother. No. it was not true. she only needed some love and tender care and she would be fine.

But, ultimately, I reached a point where denial was no longer working and I had to face the fact that she would need care. Being alone was not an option. I had to face the fact that if I was to assure that she had the best quality of life possible, it would have to be with the care of the right people, and the right places.

The concept of a senior day care center is foreign to many. Why would a senior need a day care center, and which day care center would be the best for the person that you love?

Good Fortune Day care Center is the center that is good for everybody. It has brought good fortune to the lives of those touched by it, and it would serve to bring the same to anyone else lucky enough to participate.

How do I know? It's not only that I have been blessed with the ability to bring my mother into the center. That in itself would be subjective, since the service they provided was way above the line of duty, and far better than any other centers I had visited. It is that I spoke to other people who participated that made me realize that they, too, were benefiting from the same wonderful service I was receiving.

Before Good Fortune center I tried different places, and different approaches, and for some reason, not one of them worked for my mother. She would always get upset and demand that I quickly get her out of there and never return again. When I stayed with her, I understood her feeling that these centers just didn't care. They just didn't have the time needed, and they just were not the type of professionals that I could trust with taking care of my mother.

Just when I was about to walk away and give up, my sister called and asked me if I heard of a senior day care center called "Good Fortune." I didn't! But, it was worth a try before I gave up forever, so pessimistically we drove down to the center to see what it would bring.

To my shock I found a nice, clean facility that did not have any harsh odors of left over meals that I smelled in many other facilities. I found a warm and loving staff that was genuine and cared enough to assure my mother's safety.

I found a place for Mom!

I found a place that I can walk away from knowing she is in good hands. I knew that when I walked out the door she would be taken care of, she would be nurtured, and she would never be ignored and left to her own dementia. I was also confident that when I returned, she would be happy to see me, but not desperate to run away. As a matter of fact, she would be comfortably sitting and enjoying the activity at hand.

But I was not the only one who experienced that pleasure. When I spoke to some of the other participants I found that they too have been through a similar journey and were so happy to finally find a place that made their loved ones smile.

Betty Escudero was the one taking care of her brother Bolivor Escudero, who was in need of a safe place to play. Betty never found a place that gave her the comfort that she could walk away. That was until she found Good Fortune Senior Day Care Center, and suddenly, her brother smiled again. From the first day, her brother was ready, willing, and able to go to the center every morning after she served him breakfast. Her brother was finally happy, and smiling.

If you need a place for mom or dad and you want to know they're safe and happy, check out Good Fortune. You will find the place that is good for all of vou.

Tippy Felzenstein has been bringing her mother to Good Fortune center ever since the day she found it. Her mother is thriving and doing great being nurtured by the professional and caring staff. She is available for references upon reauest.

NEW YORK CITY DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION DIVISION OF BRIDGES PUBLIC NOTIFICATION

Replacement of Shore (Belt) Parkway Bridge Over Mill Basin Borough of Brooklyn Contract No. HBK 1023 Federal Aid Project No. X021(523) N.Y.S.P.I.N. X021.52 N.Y.C.P.I.N. 84113BKBR754

The New York City Department of Transportation (NYCDOT) is undertaking a project to replace the Shore (Belt) Parkway Bridge over Mill Basin in Brooklyn. The Mill Basin Bridge is a bridge over water and is located over and immediately adjacent to tidal and freshwater wetlands. Reconstruction of the Mill Basin Bridge would result in unavoidable impacts to wetland resources. Per Executive Order 11990, wetland finding and wetland evaluation reports were prepared that documented the basis for a determination that there is no feasible and prudent alternative to impacts to wetlands and that all practical measures to minimize harm to wetlands have been included.

The proposed project would result in a total of 0.4185 acres of permanent impacts and 0.1091 acres of temporary impacts to tidal wetlands due to the proposed project. However, as a result of the removal of the existing bridge, the proposed project would gain 0.2730 acres of tidal wetlands that are currently shaded.

The proposed project would result in a total of 1.6869 acres of freshwater wetland impacts. Of the total impacted area, 0.7633 acres would be permanent impacts and 0.9236 acres would be temporary impacts to freshwater wetlands.

All impacts to wetlands shall be mitigated in accordance with Federal and State regulations. Tidal wetland restoration and improvement projects have been performed at Jamaica Bay sites within the Gateway National Recreation Area to mitigate the tidal wetland impacts from this project. A freshwater wetland restoration and improvement project is planned at a site in Marine Park, fronting Avenue U, approximately between East 34th and East 36th Streets, just east of the Marine Park Salt Marsh Nature Center, which will mitigate this project's freshwater wetland impacts.

NYCDOT is seeking public review and comment relative to the Executive Order 11990 wetland finding that there is no feasible and prudent alternative to impacts to wetlands and that all practical measures to minimize harm to wetlands have been included. Any comments from the interested public should be submitted in writing to the Project Manager indicated below. Deadline for submitting written comments is Monday, August 11, 2014.

Performers fly high for youngsters

BY DANIELLE FURFARO

A group of artists showed Bushwick kids you don't have to run away to join the circus by way of a park performance on Tuesday.

The troupe Hybrid Movement Company put on the free midday show in Maria Hernandez Park as part of the City Parks Foundations' Summerstage series. The act was meant to motivate youngsters to pursue their dreams, an organizer said.

"Our goal in this performance was to inspire the kids and make sure they are not scared to challenge themselves," said Hybrid Movement manager Joanna Duncan. "We want them to know that art changes people and people change the world."

The performance featured aerial acrobatics, classical ballet, breakdancing, and gymnastics.

The Summerstage series is meant to bring the arts to youth who do not have access to them, said City Parks Foundation programming assistant Chris Saddler, claiming that the Bushwick gallery scene does not have a trickle-down effect for area youngsters.

"Bushwick is a hot area right now, but the people who have recently gentrified Bushwick are not doing a lot of public performances for the kids," said Saddler. "This is a chance to show kids how much there is to New York City and that they can do anything they want to."

The free children's shows will continue around the city throughout the summer.

not attending church as much," said lay leader David Chicaguala. "We're excited and looking forward to the opportunities for ministry in Bay Ridge, and that's first and foremost in our minds."

The combined congregation will be able to support a full-time priest and a Sunday school, which neither church could do on its own, said priest-in-charge David Sibley, who has been working part-time jobs to support himself while leading his Bay Ridge flock. A yet-to-benamed interim priest will lead the combined congregation while it picks a more permanent priest, he said.

Soldiers from Fort Hamilton built the 180-year-old church on land donated by the Denyse family, a colonial Dutch clan that owned a ferry wharf in the 1700s. Robert E. Lee and Thomas "Stonewall" Jackson — U.S. soldiers who later went on to fame as generals in the Confederate army — attended the church when they were stationed at Fort Hamilton in the 1840s.

Changing demographics and a 1997 scandal involving a priest who sold cocaine from the vestry contributed to declining attendance, which exacerbated the church's financial woes in recent decades, said Sibley, who came to the church in 2011.

"Well over 30 years of deferred maintenance have led us to a point where well over $1.5 million are urgently needed to secure our physical plant, even as our neighborhood changes around us, and fewer people now attend church on Sunday," he wrote to congregants in a letter announcing the church's shuttering.

TheBorough of Churches is changing as more houses of worship close and give way to residential development. But the Episcopal Diocese of Long island said it does not have definite plans for the church land, according to a spokeswoman.

"As St. John's joins together with Christ Church, I will be consulting with the lay leaders of the new, joint congregation, and together we will explore the best stewardship and most appropriate disposition of the historic property that has been home to St. John's," said bishop Larry Provenzano, Episcopal bishop of Long Island.

The land is zoned for two-family homes.

If the church is leveled, the structure housing interned ashes will remain or be moved, Sibley said.

"No matter what happens to that building, the columbarium will be preserved," he said.

Locals are calling for the building to remain as a historic landmark.

"There's a lot of history there, it would be a shame if they didn't make some effort to keep the church," said Allison Greaker, whose daughter was baptized in the church in 1966.

recent years, another organizer said.

"It very quickly has become an institution — even though it's only in its third year," said Robert Howe, president of Merchants of Third Avenue. "We have a higher level of merchant participation, and we have a heightened sense in the community looking forward to the Summer Stroll evenings."

For four Friday evenings each summer, portions of the avenue are transformed into a European-style pedestrian mall where locals and visitors can shop, dine, and take in some culture.

The avenue will be closed between 69th and 80th streets on July 18 and 25, and 80th and 90th streets for Aug. 8 and 15, but cars will still be able to cross the avenue at cross streets, Howe said.

Indeed, the prospect of car-less streets gives local merchants a run for their money as the top draw for attendees, he said.

"You can play in the middle of the street," Howe said. "People enjoy taking back their neighborhood."

Dog abandoned in Mill Basin Residents are rallying to save sick terrier

BY VANESSA OGLE

An abandoned dog is melting hearts in Mill Basin with its puppy-dog eyes.

Customers at the Mill Basin Bagel Café found the adult Yorkshire terrier tied up outside the Avenue N eatery on June 27. The dog had no tags and was in sad condition — its matted fur spattered with urine and feces — so the noble noshers whisked the Yorkie across the street to the Mill Basin Veterinary Clinic.

There the matted muffin got a bath, a haircut and a check-up courtesy of Dr. Amy Lipnicki, a veterinarian at the clinic, who lamented that this poor pooch was the second abandoned pet she has seen in the neighborhood in the past few weeks.

"Some people just don't go about it the right way," said Lipnicki. "These poor little guys don't deserve that."

The check-up gave a clue as to why the dog may have been abandoned — Lipnicki discovered that the terrier needs surgery to remove a bladder stone, plus additional blood tests, and medication for a heart murmur.

Lipnicki dubbed the cuddly canine Aloisius and set up a page on the fund-raising site fundrazr.com to gather donations to cover the $1,500 cost of his blood work, medications, and surgery.

Lipnicki also noted that Aloisius — described on the fund-raising page as an "intact male" — needs fixing in another way too, but she said that would be handled during the bladder surgery.

The Mill Basin Veterinary Clinic is offering dog lovers who donate $50 or more a free nail trim and ear cleaning for their own pets.

After Aloisius has surgery, the sensitive sweetie will still need a special diet — something Lipnicki is taking into consideration. She's is reaching out to a specialty dog food company in the hope of securing a small stockpile of food for the dog's future parents.

Also, Lipnicki said that any money collected in excess of the $1,500 needed for the immediate treatment will be set aside to help cover future medical costs to make life easier for Aloisius's new family.

"It's hard to take on an adult dog with a medical condition," said Lipnicki.

Aloisius is downright elderly, in fact, estimated to be about 8-10 years old or 56–70 in dog years — but Lipnicki hopes some family in the area will open their hearts to the tired terrier.

In the meantime, Aloisius is in foster care — showing that years of apparent neglect haven't dimmed the dog's affection for people.

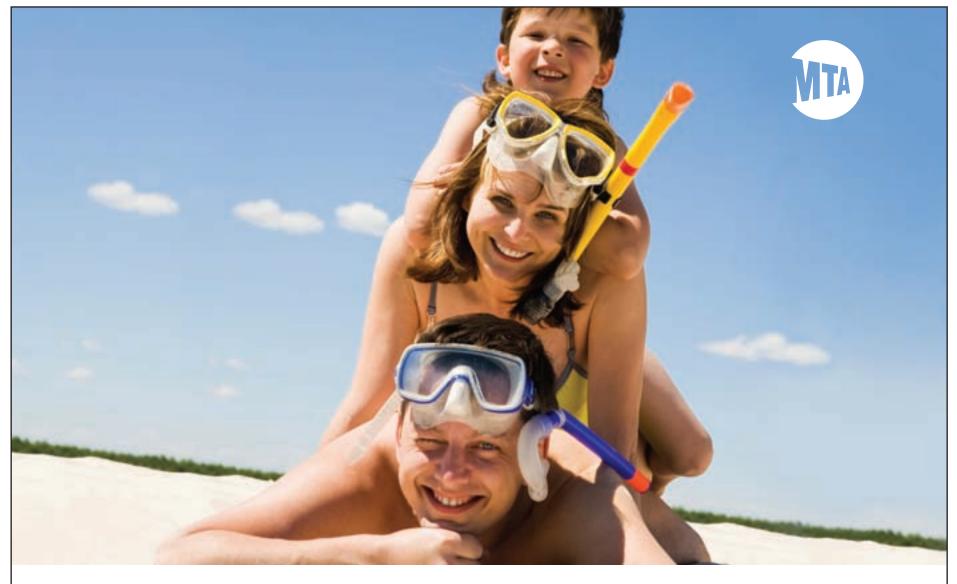

"He's always right by your foot," said his foster mother, Marquita Levs. "Whenever you turn around, there he is."

Leys said Aloisius is actually quite well-socialized, and friendly with both kids and adults. And she said that even though Aloisius isn't a puppy anymore, he still deserves lots of loving.

"Older dogs need love too," said Levs.

Donations for Aloisius can be made online at https://fundrazr.com/campaigns/co3B8?psid%3D95f b0366cfbf4315b6c2d6f5c6d3 209f, or sent to the Mill Basin Veterinary Clinic, 6315 Avenue N, Brooklyn, NY 11234.

GETTING THE JOB DONE: (Above) Several hundred people waited in a line that stretched completely around Kings Plaza during the July 8 job fair. Recruits! Prepare to work! Thousands turn out for job fair at Kings Plaza

BY VANESSA OGLE

They came, they saw — and some conquered.

Thousands of eager applicants turned out for the job fair held at the Kings Plaza shopping center on July 8, along with more than 31 businesses looking to fill around 500 positions.

One employer was impressed with the candidates, and found the employees she wanted.

"I will be able to fill the positions I was looking for," said Sandra Havertong, the district store director for Fashion to Figure, who was looking for employees for multiple businesses and locations. "They were better prepared this time - pens in hand, copies of resumes."

The biannual job fair is held each October and July at the shopping center.

With more than 4,500 attendees, the lines to enter the job fair were long and winding.

"Getting inside was a long time ," said Ngina Harris of Sheepshead Bay, who made a few connections at the event.

But once she was inside, Harris said the lines at the employers' tables took only a few minutes — and it was well worth the wait once she realized the jobs weren't dull.

"It wasn't like they were boring jobs," said Harris. "They were fun jobs."

Though there weren't enough job openings for all the applicants at the moment, Havertong walked away with a full list of new employees — and a few extra resumes, just in case.

"It was a successful day," said Havertong. "Not only am I keeping a list of people I want to take on immediately, I am keeping a list of people for the future."

Mr. Vacuum's expertise and service can't be beat

BUSINESS. BROOKLYN STYLE - ADVERTISEMENT

BY CAMILLE SPERRAZZA

If you can remember when the sound of a vacuum used to scare the kids, you probably haven't purchased a vacuum in a long time.

Today's vacuums are quieter, and they are less strenuous to operate.

See for yourself at Mr. Vacuum, the Brooklyn staple that has been around for more than 30 years. The shop carries all the top brand names, and owner Joe Callegari says, "We have the lowest prices in Brooklyn."

A huge advantage to shopping here is the insight you'll gain. Callegari has been in the business since high school. He knows his vacuums, and will gladly help you select one that meets your needs. After the sale, he'll service it, too.

"There aren't too many places that do repairs, but we still do," he says. It's all fully guaranteed.

Come in and take a look

at the latest models from brand names such as Hoover, Dyson, Eureka, Electrolux, Panasonic, and Kirby. Callegari may also introduce you to a few you may not be familiar with. He's an authorized dealer for Miele vacuums, and highly recommends it. "It will last for 20 years," he says. "It has the best filtration, and one of the largest motors.'

It's noted for being an extremely clean vacuuming experience. The company's website boasts that its "unique 12-stage AirClean filtration system retains over 99.9 percent of all fine particles from the air without releasing harmful particulates and allergens back into your home."

Callegari says, "It comes with a seven-year guarantee on the motor, one of the best guarantees in the business."

If you think your current vacuum still has some life left but could use some servicing, bring it in for repair. The shop will fix any vacuum for $14.95 plus parts and tax, says Callegari. You can pick up supplies such as filters, belts, and vacuum bags while you're there. And if you're in the market for something other than a vacuum, the shop carries steam cleaners, electric brooms, hand vacuums, janitorial supplies, and much more.

Own a sewing machine? Don't run all over, looking for a repair shop, as Mr. Vacuum fixes sewing machines for the same $14.95 plus parts and tax.

Need a new air conditioner this summer? Buy it here, and get it serviced here, too.

Mr. Vacuum is one of the last mom-and-pop vacuum stores still around. It believes in good old-fashioned customer service. Shopping here is all about personalized service. It eliminates the stress of running around a department store, looking for sales help — and then hoping that someone has the answers.

Conveniently located in Bay Ridge, there's no need to hassle with long-distant driving, tolls, or visits to the mall. Not when there's a guy in the neighborhood as knowledgeable and dependable as this. Callegari says he's been servicing the same loyal customers for decades. They wouldn't continue to come back unless they were happy.

The shop services the five boroughs.

GARBAGE GOURNET Do-gooder foodies dine in Williamsburg dumpster

BY DANIELLE FURFARO

Industrial decoration and outdoor seating are all the rage in the restaurant world, so it was only a matter of time before someone decided to host a gourmet dinner inside a dumpster.

The six-course meal in Williamsburg, the foodie world's answer to dumpster diving, was organized on June 28 and 29 by a graduate student who charged eager gourmands $50 a head for the privilege, as the website Pixable first reported. The dumpster dinner was meant to raise aumpster dinner was meant to raise awareness about the amount of perfectly edible food that gets tossed every day, its organizer said. "This was an interesting, bootson-the-ground way to inspire peoon-the-ground way to inspire people and engage them in a conversation about wasting food," said Joshua Treuhaft.

To drive the message home, the food on offer was made of ingredients that were bruised, stale, or overripe, donated by stores or bought at a deep discount.

The dumpster had previously been used for construction and not household trash, but it was still far from pristine, so Treuhaft built a deck over the floor, he said.

The space inside the trash bin was narrow, so Treuhaft had to build a custom table. Naturally, he assembled it from salvaged wood.

Some diners were apprehensive about eating in a giant trash receptacle, but in the end they had a blast, one attendee said.

"Cars kept stopping to look at us, and one guy climbed through his sunroof to take a picture," said Bill Gordon, one of Treuhaft's professors at the School of Visual Arts. "It was truly a unique experience."

The menu included heirloom tomato gazpacho, carrot-green pesto on stale bread, and pickled kale stems.

The chef scrambled to come up with the menu because she did not know until a few days before the meal what the ingredients would be, she said. Treuhaft had the dumpster delivered to the street in front of her house so that she could prepare the six-course meal upstairs.

"There was no way we could have done any prep or cooking inside that dumpster," said Celia Lam, who agreed to make the food in exchange for Treuhaft agreeing to donate the proceeds to the charity CulinaryCorps.

Since Treuhaft did not have a liquor license, he invited all of the diners up to Lam's apartment to enjoy a cocktail before the meal.

"While we were eating, some cops came by and told some people who were sitting nearby on their stoop what to do, so it is a good thing we were not drinking," Gordon said.

The dinner was part of a series of one-off dinners called the Salvage Supperclub, which Treuhaft said are an extension of his thesis on city gardening and a campaign to reduce food waste. "We want to get our guests to stop being so snobbish and judgmental about the food they eat," he said.

This was the first dumpster dinner and Treuhaft said it may be the last.

"It is a lot of work doing it inside a dumpster," he said.

B'hurst company shaves beards, grows biz

BY MAX JAEGER

A Bensonhurst business is bringing back a lost art.

The New York Shaving Company makes handblended shaving soaps and colognes, classic safety razors, and high-end lather brushes from a storefront on 20th Avenue in Bensonhurst and operates two shave parlors in Manhattan. Despite the parlors' location across the river, the service is totally Old Brooklyn, according to one of the company's founders.

"It goes back to the days that dapper guys sought out a close shave in a more masculine environment," said John Scala.

Scala and his wife started the company in 2008 on a wing and a prayer.

"We sold my engagement ring for the last $10,000 to open," said Kim Scala. "I did it because I knew this was his life-long dream."

Six years later, the company has three stores, employs about 10 people, and is getting some tall orders.

In a major first for the business, mail-order grooming-goods supplier Birchbox placed an order for 5,000 shaving kits that the husband-and-wife team just filled on July 2, Kim said.

"It's really exciting, we've never been in a program like that," she said.

The company started out of the couple's Bensonhurst home, but they quickly found they needed a dedicated space, so they leased a corner shop on 20th Avenue and 73rd Street down the street from their home.

Now the pair owns two parlors in Manhattan that offer tonsorial services — a fancy word for an even fancier shave — as well as shaving instruction and razor sharpening. With decor that looks like it was lifted from the set of HBO's "Boardwalk Empire" and barbers who look like they might be named Sal or Mack, these parlors are the real deal. And the guy shearing your stubble is guaranteed to be a master barber — a designation only attainable after 1,500 hours of school and an 18-month apprenticeship and John said he only hires masters with at least a decade of experience.

"It's a 200-year-old craft — its something that you cant pick up over night," he said.

The company may even open a parlor on Brooklyn's trendy shores — most likely in Park Slope.

Corpus Christi: We Though Many, Are One Body

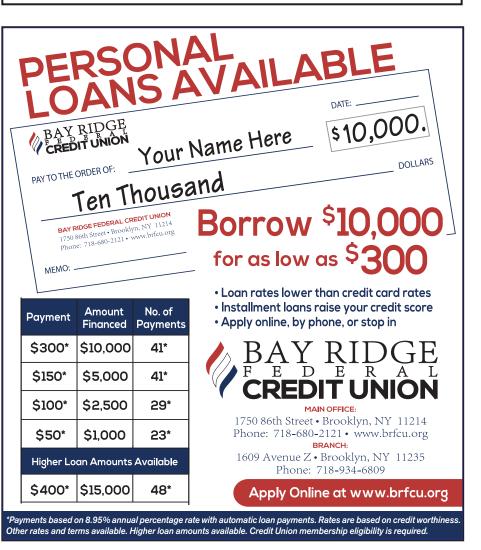

On Sunday June 22nd the St. Anselm Parishioners attending the 12pm Mass helped to make it a "day for doing, not talking" by participating in our annual Corpus Christi Procession. Following Communion, Parishioners of all ages joined the Procession as our Priests, concelebrants at the Mass, took turns carrying the monstrance containing the Blessed Sacrament out of Church and around the corner, stopping at outdoor altars in front of the Rectory and St. Anselm Catholic Academy before continuing back into the Church.

In describing the Importance of the in Bay Ridge, Brooklyn.

"Solemnity of the Most Holy Body and Blood of Christ" (Corpus Christi) Fr. Kull, the celebrant of the Mass, explained that St. Paul asks us to become the Body and Blood and live as Jesus noting that when we look around we can see Christ in our midst and in us. In addition to the very public celebration of our Catholic Faith, Parishioners were able to witness the installation of our new Altar Servers. What a wonderful day to become a member in this Ministry of Service!

Lock fad spreads to other bridges

Lovers tossing keys further up East River

BY MATTHEW PERLMAN Spread love, it's the Brooklyn Bridge way.

The Brooklyn Bridge is still the global destination for lovebirds to leave so-called "love locks" as a memento of their visit, but a handful of lost, adventurous, or otherwise ahead-ofthe-curve romantics have brought the custom to the utilitarian Manhattan and Williamsburg bridges. The Department of Transportation has declared war on the fasteners lining the more iconic of the two spans, lopping 4,000 of them off the structures along the footpath last month and claiming that they posed a hazard to drivers below, but people out strolling on the Manhattan Bridge in recent weeks said the practice is all in good fun.

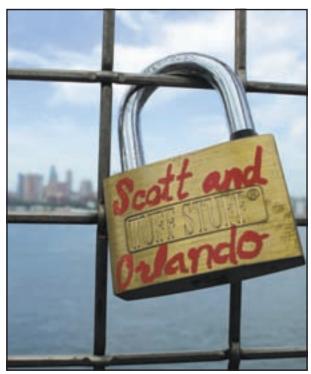

"It's not hurting anyone, so let them do it," said Steve Warren, of Bedford-Stuyvesant who was photographing his adult son riding a bike on the bridge. "It's just like graffiti. It's art."

A tourist out for a stroll on the less-inviting span, where B and Q trains run noisily alongside the chainlink-wrapped walkway, concurred.

"I think it's awesome. It looks like art when there's a lot of them," said Flo Hausler of Zurich, noting that he has seen the metal mementos in Switzerland, too. "It's like street art."

A tourism expert said the impulse driving the lock craze is as old as time.

"At the heart of this, and similar gestures, is our human desire to be remembered, to leave our mark someplace to say, 'I've been here,'" said Ann Carden, a professor of public relations at the State University of New York at Fredonia, whose research focuses on heritage tourism. "It's the same reason we carve initials in trees or fresh cement — it's a sense of permanency."

To be sure, the ManhattanandWilliamsburgbridge locks have not reached the epidemic proportions they have on the neighboring bridge — only 10 hung from each bridge during recent visits — apparently owing to the Brooklyn Bridge's superlative status as a tourist attraction.

The locks are also cropping up in the shadows of the Brooklyn and Manhattan bridges on the railings at Fulton Ferry Landing.

A glut of love locks recently caused the footbridge in Paris that is often credited with popularizing the still-spreading custom, the Pont des Arts, to be evacuated after a section of railing collapsed under their weight.

That does not seem to be a danger yet on the upriver spans, and Warren's son said roads honchos shouldn't lose sleep over it. "The city's always wasting time and our money on things that don't need to be changed," Varian Gatewood said.

The Department of Transportation did not respond to a request for comment about the growth of the phenomenon, but a previous statement makes it clear that the Manhattan and Williamsburg Bridge locks could find themselves in the crosshairs.

"As part of DOT's regular bridge cleaning and maintenance operations, crews inspect bridges across the city and will remove debris or other items left there," a spokeswoman said last month.

Warren has an idea he thinks could make everyone happy.

"Just dedicate a piece of the bridge where people are allowed to do it," he said.

A Prospect Park pooch caused an ocean of trouble for his owner last Thursday morning when, chasing a duck, he prompted her to jump into the park's lake, necessitating an aquatic rescue.

Amy Graves was walking her dog Benji, a pit bull mix, in the Peninsula area of the park during a designated leash-free time, when Benji spied a family of ducks. The pooch took off like a shot and chased the birds into the lake, suddenly uninhibited by his usual aqua-phobia.

"He's never gone for ducks before, and he usually hates water," said Graves, who lives in nearby Windsor Terrace. "Pit bulls are hunters, though, and he was just being totally relentless."

Graves did her best to convince the dog to return she was hoping to slink quito shore, but he merrily conetly back to shore and estinued his pursuit, a witness cape embarrassment, but Davis's good Samaritanism "The lady was calling kept that from happening.

"I heard sirens, and when I crossed the island I saw so many fire trucks and cops, and they were all looking for me," she said.

Emergency medical personnel launched a small motor boat and steered it to the island, where they scooped up a bedraggled Graves and her mischievous pet.

Graves appreciated the help, but she said the real hero of the day was the mother duck, who never flew off and defended her babies from a bloodthirsty Benji.

"She kept herself between them the whole time, flapping her wings at him instead of flying off," Graves said. "She was a really heroic duck."

Brooklyn Bridge rains granite down on pedestrians

BY MATTHEW PERLMAN

Brooklyn Bridge is falling down.

A group of people who, according to reports, huddled under the bridge seeking shelter from a torrential downpour last Wednesday night got a rude surprise when they were hit with a hail of granite bricks from a bridge-support wall that collapsed during the rainstorm, according to fire officials. The collapse at Prospect and Washington streets injured three kids and two adults, according to the Fire Department.

Fire personnel got the call at 7:41 pm and paramedics rushed the battered victims to Bellevue Hospital Center in Manhattan to be treated for minor injuries, according to an FDNY rep.

It is unclear what caused the collapse, but federal records analyzed by the Associated Press indicate that the bridge is among those most in need of repair in the nation.

The iconic span has been undergoing major renovations for the last four years as part of a project that the Department of Transportation expects to wrap up in 2015.

The scope of that work does not seem to encompass the section of wall that crumbled.

The support behind the wall is structurally sound, but an inspection of the bridge is ongoing, a transportation department rep said.

Spend a day in Paris with pastries, breads at Petite Fleury Bakery

BY CAMILLE SPERRAZZA

Say oui oui to the scrumptious croissants and breads at Petite Fleury Bakery, which bring a bit of Paris to Brooklyn.

And to paraphrase Marie-Antoinette, "Let them eat cake," too. Maybe some cinnamon streusel or raspberry swirl. Ooh la la!

Open in December, this quaint shop is recognizable by its striped awning, reminiscent of the bakeries found in France, deliberately designed that way so that Brooklynites experience the cuisine and the atmosphere.

Revel in baguettes — long loaves of traditional French bread that are crusty on the outside and soft on the inside. These are baked fresh twice a day — in the morning and then again in the afternoon. You'll also find pain de mie — a classic soft-crusted sandwich loaf; and sourdough bread. All are exceptionally tasty because the owner, Laurie Williams-

Fleury, has found a way to develop deeper flavors by utilizing pre-ferments and a long, slow fermentation process.

"This promotes the keeping quality of our breads without the use of preservatives or additives," she says. "Organic ingredients are used whenever possible, too."

A variety of pastries, muffins, and turnovers are sold daily. And, merci! No more looking longingly at a huge cake, then denying yourself because you don't want to buy the whole thing. Here, cheesecake and other cakes, such as a tempting French apple drizzled with caramel sauce, are sold by the slice. You really can have your cake and eat it, too.

Williams-Fleury is a trained professional, a member of the Bread Baker's Guild for about 20 years, and a graduate of the International Culinary School. Opening a bakery is the fulfillment of a lifelong dream. While she was always passionate about baked goods, the shop is her second career. She was an executive in the fashion industry, a field in which she was happy for a long time. There, she noticed that other executives would occasionally leave to pursue their passions.

"I had a boss who always wanted to write children's books," she says. "He inspired me, and showed me it was possible to build a second career."

Eventually Williams-Fleury decided she was ready to stir the batter of life, and bring a high-caliber bakery to the borough. For years, she had shopped at Farmer's Markets or traveled to Manhattan to buy the quality of food she wanted for herself and her family. She holds these same high standards to everything she serves at Petite Fleury Bakery.

Originally from Chicago, she moved to Brooklyn in 1989, and resides in Old Mill Basin, not far from the store. Both she and her husband are very involved in the community, and are particularly supportive of local churches such as Our Lady of Miracles, New Hope Church, and Mary Queen of Heaven. Whatever bread is not sold at the shop is donated to churches that feed the hungry, she says.

Petite Fleury Bakery LLC (4630 Flatlands Ave. between E. 46th Street and Schenectady Avenue in Old Mill Basin, www.PetiteFleuryBakery. com). Open Mondays through Saturdays, 7 am–6 pm.

Summer shootings and stop-and-frisk political friend recently described to me in a very simple, glib way why shootings generally go up in the summer and stay low in the winter.

"Peoplestarthangingout outside when the weather gets warm, they have a couple of drinks and then if someone pisses someone off it can lead to a shooting in certain neighborhoods," he said. "In the winter, everyone's inside, so this kind of thing rarely happens."

Well, it is not quite that simple but, yes, shootings do generally spike during the summer, and this summer, so far, they are up more than 10 percent from last year.

This past weekend there were 12 shootings in the city. This alarming trend has led some to question whether this is because of the new administration and the steep decrease in stop-and-frisks. This line of thinking was inevitable, but it seems too early to discern a trend, and we should all take a deep breath and calm down.

Stop-and-frisk was an extremely controversial policy that was used frequently during the Bloomberg administration. Police Commissioner Ray Kelly faced a lot of criticism during the mayoral campaign of 2013 that his department was unfairly profiling young black and Latino men, who made up the vast majority of those stopped and frisked. There was even a controversial court case that was decided last summer right near the end of the campaign — that sought to limit the police department's ability to use stop-and-frisk as a crime tool.

While all this was going on, the number of stop-andfrisks dropped quite precipitously anyway and, still, the rate of major crimes continued its steep decline in 2013 as the waning days of the Bloomberg administration came to a close.

Mayor DeBlasio made a wise choice when he picked Bill Bratton to be police commissioner because of Bratton's strong track record in not only reducing crime, but in smoothing relations between the police department and the community. He did this most famously in Los Angeles, and now Bratton has been working quietly and effectively to bring the NYPD into the post-stop-and-frisk era.

There has been much debate of late about whether we have enough police on the streets to keep New York the safest large city in America. When Mike Bloomberg took office in 2002, there were more than 35,000 police in the city, a number that dwindled to 31,000 by the end of his 12 vears in office. It is a testament to Bloomberg and Commissioner Kelly that they were able to keep reducing crime and keep terrorists at bay with fewer resources. But during the mayoral campaign a few candidates vowed to increase the police force again.

In the recent budget negotiations, the Council, led by Melissa Mark-Viverito. pushed for adding 1,000 more police to the force, but surprisingly both De-Blasio and Bratton opposed this. The final compromise called for adding just 200 more police, a fiscally prudent move by DeBlasio, but perhaps one that will look short-sighted if crime and shootings continue to spike once the summer ends.

Last week, Commissioner Bratton announced that he was moving 400 senior desk personnel to patrol the streets for the summer as part of a "all hands on deck" initiative which was perhaps prompted by the recent rounds of high weekend violence.

Crime fighting in New York has become much more sophisticated in recent years, with even units created that use social media to infiltrate gangs to reduce violence, which accounts for a high percentage of violent crime in the city. That example may largely explain why crime fighting has become so much more efficient and thus not as labor intensive as it was in the 1980s and 1990s.

No matter what, Mayor DeBlasio and Commissioner Bratton were wise to commission a study to see if the recent rise in shootings had any correlation to the drop in stop-and-frisks. Those who lived in New York 20 and 30 years ago sometimes — probably without much cause — worry that the city could sink back to the days of the wild, wild West when more than 2,000 murders a year were the norm (versus less than 400 last year).

Keeping the city safe and educating all of our children is definitely the two most important jobs the mayor has. and these two are actually directly related. But now that school's out and the weather's getting much hotter and people are spending more time outside drinking and partying, we need to make sure the Thin Blue Wall, as our police department is often called, is sufficiently manned to keep us safe.

Adding 200 police and getting 400 more out of the office and onto the streets is a good start.

Tom Allon, president of City & State NY, was a Republican and Liberal Party-backed mayoral candidate in 2013 before he left to return to the private sector. Reach him at tallon@ cityandstateny.com.

Not for Nuthin', Jo ignites debate on electric rates

To the editor,

As Joanne DelBuono notes, the fluctuating cost of natural gas temporarily spiked winter power bills ("What a shock! Electric rates go up despite Gov's promise," Not for Nuthin', online June 25). Unmentioned is that a major reason electric bills are so high is the steady accumulation of state taxes and fees.

According to a New York Affordable Reliable Electricity Alliance study, New Yorkers paid 83 percent more for power than the national average and 62 percent more than our neighbors in Pennsylvania. Since 2008, the cost of making electricity in New York has dropped by 30 percent. However, the benefit of cheap domestic energy has been consumed by state taxes and surcharges that have risen sharply and now account for at least 25 percent of a typical bill.

Joanna DelBuono's article underscores two long-term needs for lowering energy costs. The first is for the state to stop whacking ratepayers with high energy taxes and immediately reduce them. The second is to offset natural gas price volatility by expanding capacity through projects like Port Ambrose, a deepwater terminal off the coast of Long Island to import natural gas into the region, and preserving access to existing stable-cost power generators such as the Indian Point Energy Center, a nuclear power plant that supplies 25 percent of the city's electricity and 11 percent statewide with virtually zero emissions. Only then will we reduce the number of "you gotta be kidding me" monthly power bills experienced by Jo-Richard Thomas anna DelBuono.

takes in people who don't have an education or an occupation. They become welfare recipients and too many of them hate America.

Too many of them also come here for the social programs. There seem to be more welfare recipients here than there are workers. Some are coming here with three wives and 12 children. Who will feed them all? Soon our country will be a Latino-Afro republic with a low level of life. Muslims want to build their caliphate — they should change the name of Bay Ridge to Beirut. Where does that leave American taxpayers?

Henry Finkelstein advises Shavana Abruzzo to go back to England or to any country that will have her. Better that he think about what kind of America his grandchildren will be living in.

Reading "A Britisher's View" gives me much pleasure. I agree with Shavana Abruzzo 120 percent. I'm sure most readers agree with her, too, because political correctness is killing us. If only there were more writers like her.

'Shav' whine

To the editor,

Personal criticism and the insults that go along with them don't bother me ("Shavana Abruzzo is not an ignorant racist." Sound off to the Editor, July 4). But I do take exception to anyone that refers to my country as a "garbage dump" ("America is the world's garbage dump," A Britisher's View, June 20). Abruzzo wrote that and then tries to wallpaper it over with some pseudo-patriotic blather.

If Abruzzo really thinks that our country is a garbage dump, the remedy is clear! Move back to the place she came from. In the meantime she could apologize to all the patriotic Americans who love the America we live in. It's a good thing for Abruzzo she never ran into Merle Hag-Henry Finkelstein gard. Sheepshead Bav

Crime & education To the editor,

Your article "Jailhouse librarian pens book about dispensing prose in the pokey" (online May 9) was an interesting read, but it could transport the minds of some readers into cloud land. To construe that if every child was taught how to be a better person and to read books then perhaps they won't turn out to be criminals is usually not the case.

Offenders can be college graduates, but still prefer a life of crime because the sick desire to be hurtful to others.

Every profession has its share of criminals who use their abilities in twisted ways that hinder the safety and lives of good people. But there are also lots of youngsters and adults who have aspirations to do great deeds, if only they were taught how to implement their goals. Books and stellar educators can make all the difference. Moreover people with cognitive disabilities must be given the opportunity to make their mark. Amy Kaye

Mayor DeBlasio is to be commended for suggesting that the 2016 Democratic National Convention be brought here ("DeBlasio: Bring DNC to Brooklyn, or some other part of New York," online April 24).

I hope it will be carried out because it would be the first time in American history that such a convention was held in Brooklyn. It would be a tonic to our economy and a pot of gold at the end of the rainbow after Hurricanes Irene and Sandy.

The state has welshed in giving the city its fair share of revenue for sorely needed programs, and it is up to the mayor and the City Council to make sure the money brought to Brooklyn is spent wisely.

New Yorkers awoke to find bright yellow signs hanging on the fronts of all their public school buildings, stating in bold, red lettering the words, "free lunch." What? But before they could finish blurting out the iconic, "There ain't no such thing as a free lunch," they noticed on the bottom of the same signs the additional confusing phrase, "free breakfast, too."

Oh, joyous and wonderful day! Our bold new mayor, following in the footsteps of our bold-but-not-quite-so-new-anymore president has courageously begun to lead us down the path from the humdrum dreariness of the past's "live free or die" into the glorious future of "live for free or die."

"I have not done anything wrong," she said. "I have not broken any laws. I have not violated any IRS rules or regulations and I have not provided false information to this or any other committee."

Then she displayed colossal chutzpah by taking the fifth. Who did she protect?

Now her e-mails, which may contain incriminating information, disappeared and they may never be found. How convenient. It's only my opinion, but I do think this very loyal employee has the protection of someone way up the ladder.

Time-out for Palestinian 'cause'

The Mideast conflict over a nation the size of New Jersey has raged unabated since Israel's creation 66 years ago, but its solution depends on the state that champions anarchy, not the one that promotes peace. The abduction and murder last month of three Israeli teens and the revenge killing of a Palestinian teenager garnered the usual rounds of sympathy for Palestinians and scorn for Israelis. Yet even a cursory examination of the Palestinian cause shows it seeks the destruction of Israel over self-government.

Palestinians could have established a Palestinian state anytime during the 20 years leading up to the Six-Day War in 1967. Arabs controlled the entire West Bank, the Gaza Strip, and half of Jerusalem at the time, but there was no Palestinian nationalism to speak of at the time.

That notion is a modern gimmick born out of bitter jealousy over Israeli triumphs against the odds, not stirring patriotism. After all, how dare the Jews make Israel — a barren wasteland at the nation's formation in 1948 — into a wellspring of innovation and technology with breakthroughs in health care, agriculture, and the environment. How dare Israeli acumen engineer the most startups and the third-highest number of patents per capita in the world. How dare the Israelis give the world computer processors, the cellphone, God's particle, and numerous other life-altering inventions under the duress of daily terror from a relentless adversary. How dare Jews continue to thrive, despite a Palestinian siren allowing them mere seconds to seek shelter before exploding a rocket from the sky, showering them with lethal shrapnel. Day after day, month after month, year after year, decade after decade.

Palestinian apathy is represented in the volatile political parties that fail to represent Palestinian interests. Hamas, which governs the Gaza Strip, is a U.S.designated foreign terror group. Fatah, which leads the West Bank, traces its roots to master terrorist Yasser Arafat. Their leadership is a curse, according to the next generation.

"We wanted anything outside Gaza, even if it's a jail, there is no life here," Gaza teen Abu Huzayen told the Al-Monitor website last year before hotfooting it with pals to progressive Israel.

They're no fools. More than a dozen Arabs hold seats in the Israeli Knesset, and Muslim, Christian, and Druze populations enjoy equal voting rights, as do Arab women in a rare regional right.

The Israeli way of life is also a just one. In 2011, an Arab judge in Israel's Supreme Court convicted former President Moshe Katsav — a Jew of rape and sentenced him to seven years behind bars. Where else in the Arab world would a Jew mete out such impartial justice to a Muslim?

Palestinians have been successful in demanding concessions through violence. Just days before the United Nations granted Palestinians non-member observer status, brazen Palestinian terrorists launched a rocket in Gaza, killing Cpl. Yosef Fartuk, 18, and Alayaan Salem al-Nabari, an Israeli bedouin.

There is no moral equivalency between democrats and tyrants. Palestinian apologists and bottom feeders need to rethink their solidarity with a toxic cause that makes people career underdogs instead of architects of their own fate.

Siri-ously! Joanna jumps to the iPhone!

y readers are well aware of my stormy, expensive relationship with the mega phone company Verizon Wireless. From outrageous charges on texting to lost phones, lost service, and so much more I have had my share of battles in trying to save myself mo money, mo money.

But recently, the company that has given me molti agita redeemed itself with good deeds.

My adventurous daughter Bri left to study abroad in Florence, Italy last week. As the over-protective, anxietyriddled parent that I am, I did my best to provide not only phone access, but wifi access as well.

I signed up for the global plan on text-messaging and phone calls, which provided a reduction in price and purchased additional megabytes to use in case she needed to contact me and there was no wifi available.

The day came when Bob and I left the little one at the airport to begin her trip. On the way home from the airport Bob and I decided we would treat ourselves to new phones and proceeded to hit the nearest Verizon store to see what deals were available. We would be an iPhone family, I thought.

Buying an iPhone would provide me with Facetime, iChat, and a host of other perks, including (but not limited to) Siri, which will give me someone else to argue with while my daughter is away.

NOT FOR NUTHIN'

And boy, am I glad we did. If we didn't make that stop, Bri would not have had the access that I paid for, because no one at the megastore told me about the global card that had to be activated in order for her phone to work overseas when I purchased the plan.

Good deed number one was born. Through phone contact with Verizon global, the tech was able to activate Bri's global connection and initiate the program that I had paid for — that was good deed number two.

Without this connection, how else would this anxiety-riddled mom be able to close one eye in sleep, let alone both?

After this was accomplished, I set out to make us one big happy iPhone family and checked out the various deals on the phones. Verizon, of course, has discount phones, but never as good as Best Buy. So I marched over to Best Buy and discovered its new reward program — a $50 gift card to use in the store when you sign up for early upgrade on your phone.

Ah! A $50 gift card, just the ticket, and the switch was done. I retired my old LG Lucid to a brand-new iPhone in bright white.

Great deal!

Full steam ahead, the deal done and Verizon, that greedy mega wireless company, got me for another two years.

Not for Nuthin[™], but my new iPhone plus the global plan cost a bundle — $5 a month global fee, $25 additional megabytes, $50 new phone, $30 re-upping fee, and $40 phone case. But Face-chatting with Bri while she's in Italy? That's priceless. B

Blue streak! Carmine has new set of wheels

But today I can announce that, after a week of haggling, screaming, and waiting for replacement parts, I put the old horse out to pasture and replaced it with a brand-new, blue Tornado.

So far I haven't taken the new mare out for a gallop — the battery is still charging, but that should be finished by this afternoon, and when it is, I am setting out in the general direction of where the buffalo roam.

In the meantime, allow me to spin a few yarns about life in and around my beloved Bensonhurst. Take these delightful moments from the Community Board 13 Coney Island Mermaid Parade party that didn't make it into last week's column, please.

How's this for a come-on?

SCREECHER Carmine Santa Maria

"Is that Tornado?" a lady asked before telling me she is an avid fan of the Screecher and that she was also once a ballroom dance teacher.

I can't say I don't get that a lot. Don't let its diminutive dimensions and utilitarian appearance fool you. The motorized scooter I call throne for most of each day is an undercover hot rod that gets ample attention from observers with discerning taste.

But my wheels aren't the only thing that keep me from being able to roll five feet through a civic function without being flagged down. I also get droves of well-wishers reminiscing about the good times at the Boy Scouts' annual "Breakfast with Santa" fund-raiser, which they may as well go ahead and call "Breakfast with Santa Maria" at this point (I jest, and I digress).

Back when he could still make the steps to Parish Hall — with a platoon of party goers pushing me — your humble narrator donned a Kris Kringle outfit each year and held court, hearing the yuletide desires of each of the whippersnappers one by one.

Over the years, Santa Maria Claus packed in the milk and cookies to the point that he could no longer attend, but the spirit of his Christmases lives on, as evidenced by the admirers telling me, "I got your picture with my son when he was a baby and now he's in college."

Now is as good a time as any to make an abrupt U-turn across the median without signalling and say that journalists who today lament the end of celebrity access ignore the fact that one of the most celebrated celebrity features of all time was written without talking to its subject.

That's right. All those nambypamby Twitter addicts who curse the names of publicists, claiming the gatekeepers are multiplying and the windows of opportunity for the unfettered access that is the difference between a 400-word question-andanswer and an expansive cover story are closing are ignoring the classic Gay Talese piece "Frank Sinatra has a cold," on which the modern touchstone 'Carmine Santa Maria has hunger pangs" is closely based. And they ignore it at their peril.

To all the aspiring journalists reading this, celebrity-focused and otherwise, go forth! Seek out the little guy or gal, the person holding a mop or a bottle of water, the one standing listlessly in the rear corner of the cathedral, the one pressing her face in the window to glimpse the face on which she has bestowed all the world's meaning.

Celebrities are people, sure, but they are written about ad nauseam, to the point that unearthing a new detail about their lives is an endeavor akin to deepwater oil drilling. But they are the characters that reflect to the public, the readers of newspapers, the watchers of television, and the users of Twitter, what they want to see in themselves. And those same readers, viewers, and unpaid commentators will always be surprised and fascinated when the camera turns the other way.

Happy Fourth of July, America! The pen is mightier than the sword and Providence knows some people's prose need cutting. Stay free and I'll screech at you next week.

TAKING AN OATH: Mark Susi of the Weisbaden Civilian Personnel Advisory Center swears in Summer Hire workers during orientation on Clay Kaserne on June 30. Karl Weisel (IMCOM)

Young adults get Army summer jobs

HARBOR WATCH

A little more than 40 community youths, ages 18 to 23, stood tall in the Tony Bass Auditorium in Weisbaden, Germany on June 30 with their right arms raised to utter the oath of office to begin working as federal employees in this year's Summer Hire Program.

"I welcome you," said Chris Macri, director of the U.S. Army Garrison Wiesbaden's Directorate of Human Resources, "on behalf of the garrison. You'll be supporting the community by striving to do the best job that you can ... This experience will look good on your resumes as you go on to look for jobs in the future.

"This isn't school, but I do expect you to learn," Macri added, advising the young people to use their time wisely. "Work hard and have a fun and safe summer."

Several garrison officials provided the Summer Hires with workplace guidance before Rodney Hargus, operations officer for the garrison's Directorate of Plans, Training, Mobilization and Security, explained their responsibilities and the oath they would soon be swearing to officially mark their entrance to the federal workforce.

"This is a paying job one that you can be terminated from ... You are on the clock," Hargus said, instructing his listeners to "dress like professionals and to act like professionals ... Cultural awareness is important to good customer satisfaction ... Choose to have a positive attitude — it helps everybody. Treat others the way you want be treated."

"Your responsibility as an employee is to follow Equal Employment Opportunity laws and statutes," said Ron Vitiello, garrison EEO officer. "EEO is the law. It prohibits discrimination in employment based on race, color, sex, national origin or religion."

Vitiello asked the novice employees to treat each other with respect.

"Teamwork is the key — work together. You as an individual can make a difference in the federal workplace."

Tooth decay #1 problem Army dentists fighting a battle against sugary drinks

HARBOR WATCH

Sugar is being called "the new tobacco." Its many forms have been linked to the increasing rates of diabetes, heart disease, nonalcoholic fatty liver diseases, and other chronic diseases in the U.S.

Army dentists have been fighting on the front lines against sugar for decades. Despite their best efforts, tooth decay continues to be the main cause of dental disease and non-battle injuries among deployed soldiers.

From 2000 to 2008, the oral health of Dept. of Defense recruits worsened. The 2008 Tri-Service Oral Health Survey revealed that Army recruits have higher numbers of untreated cavities compared to other defense recruits. A study at the largest Army installation showed that about one third of soldiers develop new treatment needs every year.

Army soldiers have better access to education about oral hygiene and proper nutrition, fluoridated water, fluoride toothpaste, and dental care than many Americans. But Army dentists report that these defenses can't compensate for soldiers' frequent snacking habits and the popularity of soft drinks, sports drinks, energy drinks, sweetened coffee, sweet tea, and coffee boutique drinks (frappacinos, etc).

Army dentists are all too familiar with the rampant decay that results when a soldier sips on sugary drinks throughout the day. Drinks that contain high amounts of sugar, caffeine and citrus flavors often cause extensive tooth decay, likely due to the combination of high sugar content and organic acids.

SUGAR HIGH: Oral health of the Department of Defense recruits worsened from 2000 to 2008 due in part to soldiers' dependence on sugary, caffeinated drinks. US Army Photo

Young soldiers often don't pay attention to the sugar, calories, or caffeine in their drinks. One large iced coffee can have 11 teaspoons of sugar. But even if they check the label, looks can be deceiving. The amount of sugar, caffeine, and carbohydrates per serving listed on a single can of an energy drink may not seem that bad, but they can actually contain two servings, so you must multiply by 2.

The most popular energy drink purchased at AAFES stores, 16-ounce Monster, has 13 teaspoons, and the most popular soda, 20-ounce Mountain Dew, has more countermeasures to protect themselves from decay:

•Replace sugared beverages with sugar-free alternatives, plain water, mineral water, or unsweetened coffee or tea.

•Fruit juice contains sugar and acid also, so limit juice to 6 ounces of calciumfortified juice per day. Eat fresh fruit to meet daily fruit intake goals.

•Drink sugary or acidic drinks quickly, within 15 minutes, rather than sipping on them for an extended period of time.

•Limit meal, beverage and snack intake to no more than five times per day. Combine sugary beverages or juice with a meal, ideally near the beginning of the meal.

•Try to drink sugary, erosive drinks cold to minimize the acidic effects.

•Use a straw that reaches to the back of the tongue to keep the drink away from your teeth.

•Drink plain water immediately following the sugared drink to "wash" it off of the teeth and neutralize the acid from the drink. Chew sugar-free or xylitol gum to help neutralize acid also.

•Wait at least 20 minutes after drinking sugary beverages or 100 percent fruit juice before brushing teeth with fluoridated toothpaste.

•Do not rinse your mouth after brushing. Just spit several times to remove the excess toothpaste. Also, don't eat or drink anything for at least 20 to 30 minutes after you brush so the fluoride will stay on your teeth as long as possible and protect them better.

Remember: sip all day, get decay!

New dawn at Red Cloud

Military band signals a Change of Command in S. Korea

HARBOR WATCH

With the martial strains of a military band sounding on the morning air, Col. Jack Haefner assumed command of U.S. Army Garrison Red Cloud and Area I during a 10 am ceremony in Uijeongbu on Camp Red Cloud's tree-lined Village Green parade field, giving the US Army installation that supports the 2nd Infantry Division a new commander on June 30 at Camp

Red Cloud. The garrison manages installations in the northwest of South Korea from the Demilitarized Zone south to a point about an hour north of Seoul, the nation's capital.

Haefner replaces Col. John M. "Mike" Scott, an Apache attack helicopter pilot who led the garrison for nearly two years. Scott moves to a new assignment at the Pentagon as Chief of Staff of Joint Force Development, J7.

Haefner's most recent previous assignment was as Assistant Chief of Staff, Engineer, at Eighth Army in Seoul.

Assembled on the field were the 2nd Infantry Division Band, soldiers of the U.S. Army Garrison Red Cloud, and civilians of the Area I Korean Service Corps.

But the morning's formation differed in at least two respects from that at which Scott became commander two years ago. It included members of the U.S. Air Force's 604th Air Support Operations Squadron, a unit stationed at Camp Red Cloud. And it featured a contingent of the garrison's civilian workforce, dressed for the occasion with the men in dark pants and white shirts, and women in dark skirts and white blouses.

In her remarks as keynote speaker, Debra D. Zedalis, director of Installation Management Command-Pacific Region, praised Scott's "solid and caring leadership" and "steadfast professionalism."

"Garrison commanders

must create an environment where soldiers and their families know they will be taken care of, 24-seven," said Zedalis, "and that's exactly what Mike and his team did."

Scott's tenure saw numerous improvements that benefitted the Area I community, Zedalis said.

They included renovation of barracks and a family readiness center; a new Child Development Center and two new Child and Youth centers; and improvements to a building that serves as the one-stop central processing site for soldiers and others starting an Area I tour of duty.

Scott also "always took a personal interest in mentoring" the garrison's civilian employees, and kept closely involved in fostering good services for the Area I's youngsters.

Zedalis noted that the garrison under Scott's leadership had won numerous awards. They included, among others, first-place in the IMCOM-Pacific Region for the best Better Opportunities for Single (and unaccompanied) soldiers, or BOSS, program in 2013; for the best large fire department; and awards for the quality of its commissaries and Exchanges.

Zedalis said Haefner was "no stranger to garrison business" having at one point commanded U.S. Army Garrison A.P. Hill in Virginia. Haefner's most recent assignment on the Eighth Army staff in Korea had afforded him "a wealth of knowledge that is wellsuited for tackling" the challenges of leading the garrison over the next two years.

"I know you will continue to move the garrison forward in serving soldiers, civilians and families and transforming to meet future needs," Zedalis said.

Scott, in his farewell remarks, said he departs the command "with many fond memories and an overwhelming sense of thankfulness."

He thanked the garrison's "hard-working and dedicated" staff, as well as its command teams at Camp Red Cloud and Camp Casey and their support staffs.

"Your day-to-day sacrifices and dedication has been a true inspiration to me, and I wish you all the very best," Scott said.

Scott reserved a special word of thanks to the Korean community, mentioning not only its civic leaders and organizations but the garrison's Korean employees and KATUSA soldiers — South Korean soldiers assigned to duty with the U.S. Army.

Speaking his next few sentences in Korean, Scott said:

"You are such a vital part of the day-to-day activities of the garrison ... And to all of you I offer my thanks and my very best wishes ... I am and will always be, proud to be a member of this partnership," Scott said.

He also acknowledged the "crucial support and guidance" of several senior leaders, including Zedalis and Lt. Gen. Bernard S. Champoux, the commanding general of Eighth Army. And he thanked several current or former 2nd Infantry Division senior leaders, including its current commanding general, Maj. Gen. Thomas S. Vandal.

In brief remarks upon assuming command, Haefner thanked Zedalis and Vandal for their "confidence" in allowing him command of the garrison.

"I am humbled by this opportunity," said Haefner. "And I pledge to you ... my very best to keep Area I strong, and to make it stronger."

WELCOME HOME: Sgt. Nathan Phelps embraces wife Kalan and daughter Peyton upon his rerturn from a deployment to Afghanistan. The return celebration was held at Schofield Barracks, Hawaii, on June 24. Staff Sgt. Rechard Sherba

'Centurions' go home to families

HARBOR WATCH

During the late hours of June 24 a 10-staff personal security detachment team from the 57th Military Police Company, 728th MP Battalion, 8th MP Brigade, 8th Theater Sustainment Command, boarded passenger vans at the Honolulu International Airport en route to Chofield Barracks to receive a welcome home from "Centurion" soldiers.

The Centurions standing by here represented the entire 57th MP Co. joined by friends, colleagues and families.

To the family members who anxiously awaited their husbands and fathers it made no difference if it were 10 soldiers returning or a thousand. The ceremony befitted a much larger element.

From the handshake at the airport from Command Sgt. Major Charles Tobin, senior enlisted adviser, 8th TSC, to the final ride home on the H-1 freeway with the Centurion command team, to the welcoming, here, from senior leadership throughout the 728th MP Bn. and 8th MP Bde., the most important moment finally came — the hugs and kisses of wives and children.

This PSD team had responsibility for escorting, navigating and protecting battlefield leaders during a nine-month deployment to Afghanistan. It ensured the safety of battlefield leaders. Each PSD soldier was willing to place self between the battlefield leader and harm's way at any given time.

Upon arriving, here, Sgt. 1st Class Todd Bailey, noncommissioned officer in charge, PSD, 57th MP Co., spoke about his soldiers' performance during the deployment.

"I'm very blessed to have these soldiers, and that God said, 'hey, you're going to lead them and bring them back,' and I'm proud of that," he said. "These soldiers really bloomed. Their maturity and professionalism in respect to understanding the situation and mission were outstanding."

One of the families at the redeployment ceremony was the Acosta family, consisting of May Acosta, wife of Staff Sgt. Matthew Acosta, shift leader, PSD, 57th MP Co., and their two children Karly Rose and Kalei.

As they anxiously awaited their father's return, Karly Rose and Kalei spoke about their excitement and their feelings.

"It's crazy, on a scale of one to 10. I am at 100!" said daughter Karly Rose, age 14.

Tree-branch-on-car collision sours folk night

BY NATHAN TEMPEY

A pair of Park Slope folk-music fans got a rude surprise on Tuesday night when they returned from a concert in Manhattan to find a massive tree branch lying atop their car.

The Prospect Park West couple, both media professionals, arrived back at their home near Seventh Street from a Crosby, Stills, and Nash concert at around 11:45 pm to discover half of the top of the tree sitting on, and sticking through the windshield of, their Subaru station wagon.

"We just came home and there was a car on top of our tree," said a stunned Beth Petescia.

Her husband Chris gently corrected her.

"Vice versa," he said. The tree limb apparently came down during the brief rainstorm that swept through Brooklyn around 10:40 pm. A neighbor said he heard Fire De-

TIMBER: The wind of a July 8 squall apparently brought down twobig chunks of trees on a block of Prospect Park West, one of whichcrushed two cars.Beth and Chris Petescia partment personnel using a chainsaw on the block around 10:45 or 11, but an FDNY spokesman said he could not locate a record of what transpired there.

Tree parts came down across the city, but no one was injured, the spokesman said.

The worst aspect of the incident was that it was avoidable, Chris Petescia said.

"The funny thing is there were two spots open, and had we taken the one further back, the car wouldn't have gotten hit," he said.

A Hyundai sedan also sat in the imprint of the fallen branch and, a block towards Bartel Pritchard Square, another tree limb lay across the bike path, posing a hazard to night riders.

Libraries are full of stories. BRIC offers the tools to help you tell yours.

In the age of YouTube, Netflix, and the next big social media platform, people are constantly finding new ways to share their stories. This is also being made possible by organizations like BRIC and Brooklyn Public Library (BPL), who have partnered to provide free and low-cost media training. Last year, they helped over 1,000 Brooklyn storytellers amplify their voice across the ever-changing media landscape.

Providing free two-hour workshops in digital storytelling, digital camera basics, short-form video techniques, social media, stopmotion animation, and more, BRIC is giving library patrons opportunities to expand their media repertoire, boost their resumes, or inspire a new hobby. BRIC's Field Services Coordinator, Mark Pagan says of the classes, "Besides being free, these trainings are what you want them to be. We have students who return week after week to use equipment and get guidance on projects they're working on and get experience with various levels of production." These classes provide a very unique opportunity for Brooklynites. Pagan continues, "How can you pass up classes that you can show up to anytime, with any questions and experience level, have oneon-one teacher time, and are free!"

In addition to these established free classes, this summer BRIC expands its low-cost certification and non-certification classes through the library. Popular courses such as Video Production in the Field, Video Editing with Premiere, Intro to Graphic Design, Motion Graphic with After Effects, and Web Video Production that have typically only been available at BRIC Arts | Media House (647 Fulton Street) are now available to the community right in their neighborhood.

One of the best perks about taking BRIC's certification classes still remains becoming a Certified Community Producer, allowing you to produce and air your own show on Brooklyn's public access network. BPL is also a resource for Certified Community Producers in that they can check out production equipment for their video shoots at Kings Highway Library, Coney Island Library, and New Lots Library (in addition to BRIC House), making BRIC's services more accessible throughout Brooklyn.

BRIC's media classes are currently being offered in Central Library (10 Grand Army Plaza), Kings Highway Library (2115 Ocean Avenue), New Lots Library (665 New Lots Avenue), Coney Island Library (1901 Mermaid Avenue), and at BRIC House (647 Fulton Street).

Get to know the faces of BRIC Media Education

Chris Federico, Certified Community Producer

How did you first get involved with BRIC?

I really needed to learn to edit, and I was looking at classes at other schools — continuing education, colleges — and it's, you know, a $1,000 class...I came to a BRIC media education orientation, and on top of them having everything I needed, everybody was really nice. BRIC is such an incredible resource. They give you access to equipment, teach you how to use it, teach you postproduction...And then they'll air your work for you! That's huge.

What's your main focus as a video producer?

I'm an actor who comes from a theater background, and I wanted to learn more about film and television. If you have a play and you don't have a video clip of that on your website, you're kind of dead in the water. But a lot of theater companies don't have the funds to do that. And now, if my friends are in a play and they want me to shoot something, I can come to BRIC and take out a camera for the day, and then spend a week or two editing it. I literally give their play a movie trailer. I really enjoy bridging that gap. And it's not costing them thousands of dollars, because I get the equipment for free and I can edit it for free.

What would you say to someone who's considering taking classes with BRIC?

If you have a story that you want to tell on video or film, this is the place. If you have an idea and you're willing to put in the work, they will give you everything you need, from the equipment to the knowledge. And it's a real community.

Shaun Seneviratne, BRIC Media Instructor

What stands out about BRIC Media Education?

BRIC offers a ton of amazing classes to get started with media making. The community at BRIC is tight knit, the super-knowledgeable instructors come from all walks of media, and the folks in Public Equipment are incredibly helpful and accommodating. BRIC is also always revising their classes with new tools and skills and adding new classes for folks to take their media making to the next level (an upcoming class is Documentary Filmmaking).

What are some projects you've worked on in the past or are currently working on?

I've made many narrative short films and freelance documentary projects, assistant edited two feature films, and written articles for Filmmaker Magazine. I'm currently in preproduction on a new short film I plan to shoot in August on long-distance relationships and cultural identity, as well as a web series for MTV Desi on dating and South Asian culture.

What classes are you teaching this summer?

This summer I'm teaching Interview Skills where we'll solely focus on shooting and lighting for different types of interviews with a variety of camera setups. I've got a few Video Editing with Premiere classes on the docket and Video Production in the Field in August, which is my favorite class to teach.

Life-size dinosaur robots roar into Brooklyn

By Max Jaeger

Hold on to your butts! A pack of 20 life-size, animatronic dinosaurs will rampage through the Barclays Center starting July 16 as part of "Walking With Dinosaurs — The Arena Spectacular," a live-action take on the eponymous British Broadcasting Network series.

Audiences can gaze on the mighty Tyrannosaurus Rex, the gentle Brachiosaurus, and the fearsome Utahraptor — as well as a number of other species — as they parade through the arena in the 90-minute look into the lives of these long-dead lizards. And because the prehistoric creatures range from a few feet to a dozen yards tall, there isn't a bad seat in the house, an organizer said.

"Really anywhere you are you have a chance to be eye-to-eye with a dinosaur," said spokeswoman Terey Summers, who said some of the robo-reptiles stand nearly three stories tall.

The show promises to be a mix of spectacle and education. A paleontologist emcee takes the audience through three periods the Triassic, Jurassic, and Cretaceous — to show how the once-kings-of-the-earth lived and interacted, Summers said.

The million-dollar monsters are a feat of engineering and puppeteering, and many of the biggest beasts require three puppeteers to control, Summers said. The dino wranglers wear gadgets on their wrists called "voodoo controls" that allow them to dictate the beasts' movements with a wave of their hand, she said.

"It's like 'The Wizard of Oz,'" she said. Smaller predatory dinosaurs are actually played by hyper-athletic actors in 100-pound suits, said Matt Olver, who leads a team of six suited puppeteers.

The show has been roaring through towns worldwide for years, but hasn't toured the U.S. since 2007, and Summers said dino designers have updated their replica reptiles to jibe with the latest scientific findings. The once-leathery lizards have taken on a more avian appearance after scientists found evidence dinosaurs may have had feathers, Summers said.

The dinos' looks aren't the only thing that has evolved — the actors that inhabit the suits have changed their mannerisms to match the latest science, explained Olver.

"Every tour the paleontologists tell us something new," he said. "Before it was more like killer reptiles in a wolf pack then they became more predatorial-birdlike."

"Walking With Dinosaurs — The Arena Spectacular" at the Barclays Center [620 Atlantic Ave. at Flatbush Avenue in Prospect Heights, www.dinosaurlive.com, (917) 618– 6100]. July 16–20. Tickets start at $38.20. 24

By Danielle Furfaro Thich came first — the chicken

A Brooklyn-centric celebration of the symbiotic relationship between chicken keepers and home brewers is coming to Brooklyn Brewery, where participants will revel in the odd fact that beer can help make omelettes.

"We are trying to foster more connections and close loops in the food system," said Robin Burger, events manager at local edibles advocacy group Just Food, which has dubbed the event Kegs and Kluckers.

Frosty beer and frittatas are connected because the spent barley and grain used in the beer-making process is the perfect snack for our fine feathered friends. But, too often, said Burger, brewers throw the grain out and it goes to waste.

"It is something not everyone knows about, and we are trying to change that," said Burger. "Chicken keeping and home brewing are two things everyone loves, so they are usually receptive to hearing how they can help."

The event is a fund-raiser aimed at supporting Just Food's City Chicken Campaign, where the group helps schools, community gardens, and other groups establish chicken coops.

The party will include tastings from restaurants including Urban Rustic, 508

Gastrobrewery, and Saltie. There will also be an "egg Olympics" with events such as an egg toss, an egg relay, and a deviled egg making competition. And, of course, there will be plenty of beer consumption, courtesy of Brooklyn Brewery and a smattering of homebrewers.

Cell phone cinema Film festival celebrates movies made on cheap equipment

By Danielle Furfaro

hat video that you made in your apartment last night — no, not that one — might just be cinematic gold.

The Disposable Film Festival, a Californian fest dedicated to short films made with amateur equipment, has started a monthly spin-off event at Williamsburg bar-cinema Videology. And the organizers are hoping Brooklynites will contribute some lo-fi flicks of their own to the mix.

"We are all filmmakers now," said organizer Matthew Sullivan-Pond. "What we are looking for is something where people have been innovative and imaginative."

The Videology screenings will serve as a mine for material for the annual festival in San Francisco, a massive event that usually draws about 1,500 fans.

The festival organizers are specifically looking for films made with less-than-professional equipment, including cell phones, digital single-lens reflex cameras, webcams, or even Google Glass.

That broad description might tempt some to send in their baby and cat videos, but Sullivan-Pond said the videos need to be high quality — if not in resolution, then in content.

"You need some kind of curation or else it will be another YouTube, with a million videos of guys getting kicked in the nuts," he said.

One of the films in this month's lineup will be "Solo, Piano — NYC," a film made of up still-shots that photographer Anthony % f(x) = 0

Sherin took from his apartment window after someone left an upright piano in front of his building.

"The shots are loaded with emotion," said Sherin, who shot the pictures as dozens of passersby stopped to play the piano and then a crew of brutish louts smashed it with a sledgehammer. "It is a really New York story."

Sherin has shown his short film in nearly 100 film festivals and said he is happy to be a part of the Disposable Film Fest.

"It is a nice, small venue that seems to be filled with film enthusiasts," he said.

Misty water colored memories: This painting of the Lehigh Valley Barge 59 is part of "Out of the Box and Over a Barrel." Waterfront Museum

Barging in

Puppet show revives heyday of New York's working waterfront

By Noah Hurowitz

This story comes with a few strings attached.

The Waterfront Museum is celebrating the 100th birthday of the river barge it calls home with a puppet show telling the history of New York's working waterfront. "Out of the Box and Over a Barrel," which opens on July 12, will revive the sights and sounds of the barges that once filled the harbor, ferrying cargo from ships to rail yards in Brooklyn and New Jersey.

The show is based in part on oral history — particularly that of a woman whose father worked for decades as a barge captain in the harbor, explained one of the show's creators.

"We took photos, oral history, and artistic license, and put together the story of this barge captain," said David Sharps, president of the floating Red Hook museum.

Alice Scanlan's father was captain of the Lehigh Valley Barge 59. She and her family lived in the cabin of the barge from 1927 to 1936, through the height of the Great Depression. Using Scanlan's memories of life on the water, Sharps and his collaborators crafted a multimedia play to tell her story and those of others who lived or worked on the harbor in the era of the barge and tugboat.

Scanlan's narrative comes through in puppet form. The show follows an older woman who, after finding an old photo album, goes on a journey through her own memories. Upon this discovery, a young girl puppet takes over the story, guiding the audience through her recollections of harbor life.

And there is plenty of source material to draw from — as many as 5,000 barges cruised New York harbor in the heyday of barge shipping in the 1930s and 1940s, said Sharps. Each barge could carry as much as 300 tons of cargo, filling up to 20 railcars that could then bring goods to far-flung markets out west.

"The motto of New York Harbor was, 'Every railroad can visit every ship,'" Sharps said. "If shoes were coming from Italy, they would be off-loaded from barge to train and then head to Chicago or California."

The Waterfront Museum itself is part of that history. The entire museum is housed on Barge 79 of the Lehigh Valley Railroad, a still-functioning barge much like the one Scanlan grew up on.

The best reads — handpicked by local bookstore employees

Word's pick: "The Girl With All the Gifts" by M.R. Carey

In a spare bunker, a little girl named Melanie and her classmates live strange lives. They're taken to class in restraints, bathed in weird chemicals, and fed nasty things. It's a lonesome, sterile life, one brightened only by the presence of kind teacher Miss Justineau. When the outside world intrudes, Melanie, her sergeant keeper, her teacher, and a laser-focused scientist wind up on a road trip across an England ravaged by biological change. Why it happened, what it means for humanity, and why Melanie is so peculiar — Carey teases out the answers to these questions and more.

The BookMark Shoppe's pick: "Vintage" by Susan Gloss

Susan Gloss's novel "Vintage" is a magical story of friendship, love, loss, and betrayal, but most of all fashion. Hourglass Vintage, a consignment shop in Madison, Wis., is close to bankruptcy and owner Violet Turner is praying for a miracle to keep its doors open. Help comes in unusual and unexpected places. Told in alternating voices, finally a novel has come along that surpasses "The Friday Night Knitting Club." Journey with three women as they try to turn the shop profitable, and unexpectedly transform their own lives in the process.

Greenlight Bookstore's pick: "The Fever" by Megan Abbott

When a group of young teenage girls start developing violent seizures, the small community where they live is struck with near paralyzing fear. No one knows what has caused the girls to become ill, but there is an eeriness accompanying the community's fear as everyone knows or senses that there's some secret they're not being told.

PRESERVATION ROAD

Role-playing detective game will light up Dumbo streets

By Matthew Perlman

T is "History Detectives" meets the historic district. A high-tech game will hit the cobblestone streets of Dumbo on July 18, where participants posing as a team of detectives will comb the area for clues that will help build a case for historic preservation. The free role-playing fun is intended to get people looking at their surroundings more closely, said one of the designers.

"It's all about how to get people interested in space again," said Adelle Lin, who developed the game with fellow designer Alex Garkavenko. "We're really interested in gentrification and our game is a playful take on this thing that's happening everywhere."

In "Who's That Loft," players will carry ultraviolet torches and scour a portion of the neighborhood looking for markings made with invisible ink. When the special light uncovers one of the stamps — which might be placed on building walls, on interesting architectural elements, or even on the ground — players snap a photo of it on their phone.

Each uncovered marking represents a clue about the history of the site, which will help to convince a fictional developer to preserve it, explained Lin.

"They've hired us investigators to find the history and the characteristics that make the place unique," she said.

After collecting all the clues in a given area, players go to the game organizers, receive a puzzle piece, and move on to the next area. The puzzle pieces fit together to form a photograph of an actual Dumbo building, with some historic facts on the back.

Lin hopes the game will make people notice details about the neighborhood, to understand what makes it special.

"We want to draw attention to the fabric of the neighborhood," she said.

"Who's That Loft" is part of the Come Out and Play festival, a night of innovative street games and outdoor video games that will take place beneath the Manhattan Bridge archway and at other locations around New York City. Other games at the Dumbo site will include "Musclebound Glory," in which participants compete to come up with the best '80s action movie-style zingers, and "EXO: Arena," where players can use their iPhones to play laser-tag — minus the lasers. The amusements at the festival are intended to bridge virtual and physical worlds to create new kinds of experiences, and new ways for people to have fun.

Lin sees her game as doing just that.

"A lot of times game designers are focused on creating an intimate experience with a screen," she said. "We want to make one with a physical space."

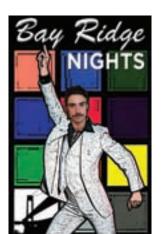

"Who's That Loft" at the Come Out and Play Festival (beneath the Manhattan Bridge archway off Anchorage Place between Pearl and Plymouth streets in Dumbo, www.comeoutandplay.org). July 18 at 7 pm. Free.

Go play outside in Bay Ridge

By Max Jaeger et out of the house and into the great Bay Ridge outdoors!

After a wet and possibly boozy Fourth of July weekend, dry out (literally and figuratively) in the Ridge with some al fresco events that can be enjoyed by kids and adults alike.

A screening of "Mr. Poppers Penguins" at Narrows Botanical Garden (Shore Road at 72nd Street) on July 11 is perfect for both a night out with the family or a light-hearted movie date. In this 2011 romp, Jim Carey plays Mr. Popper, an uptight workaholic whose explorer father dumps a flock of penguins in his Manhattan apartment. The screening starts at sundown — around 8:30 pm.

Rock out with your picnic blanket out at State Sen. Martin Golden's Concerts in the Park series. The event hits Shore Road Park (Shore Road at 79th Street) on July 15 at 7 pm, where Radio Daze will kick out party jams from the 1970s and '80s — including Bon Jovi, Thin Lizzy, Peter Gabriel, and the Cars.

And enjoy some culture beneath the clouds back at Narrows Botanical Garden on July 19, when local theater school Act-Out! Productions opens its Shakespeare in the Park production of the Bard's "Othello."

The play, which features a combination of new students and professional actors, will run weekends through July 27. The performance starts at 7 pm and a $10 donation to the garden is suggested.

FEATURE RESTAURANT Want crab, lobster, and shellfish? Come to Jordan's Lobster Dock

BY CAMILLE SPERRAZZA

Jordan's Lobster Dock was the first to introduce the lobster roll to New York. says Bill Jordan, who runs the wholesale restaurant started by his father in 1938.

The lobster roll — "quarter pound of pure lobster meat served on a toasted bun" — is one of the signature items you'll find on the restaurant's menu, savs Jordan.

"We don't add celery or other fillers that you'll find at other places. It's 100 percent lobster." They don't even add mayo. Tartar sauce, mayonnaise, and lettuce are served on the side, so people can dress the lobster to their liking.

dealers in the area.

"We buy lobster by the ton," says Jordan. As a result, pricing is "excellent," he says. "We deal directly with people in Canada and Maine, and the savings are passed along to customers."

You can pick up live lobsters and cook them yourself. Or, you can call ahead, and Jordan's will steam them for you, so you can take them home, ready to serve.

About 40 years ago, Jordan's Lobster Dock expanded to include a restaurant that can accommodate 75 seafood lovers. Here, you can enjoy lobster steamed or broiled, or one of the many other seafood items offered. The atmosphere at Jor-ster to wholesale and retail or waitresses. Customers are called when their food - all cooked to order - is ready. It's no-frills seafood.

And everyone deserves the treat of eating this delicious, affordable seafood, so there is a no tipping policy at Jordan's. Because, in this economy, who needs an extra 15 to 20 percent added on to the bill?

If you're among those who appreciate variety in your diet, Jordan's has you covered. The restaurant serves shrimp, mussels, clams, oysters, soft-shell crabs, crab legs, fish cakes, swordfish, salmon, tuna steak, calamari, and other treasures from the sea. key lime pie.

Eating lobster is good for you.

"A lobster is lower in fat. calories, and cholesterol than white meat chicken and turkey," Jordan says.

While some people fear cooking their own lobster at home, it's really not that difficult, he says.

"We recommend that you cook your lobsters on the day you get them," he says.

If you are boiling your lobster, a big pot of water, thyme, and bay leaves makes a tasty broth, he says.

He recommends squeezing some lemon juice into the water, throwing in the rinds, and bringing everything to a boil. Then, "pick up the lobster, and quickly place it, head first, into the boiling water." It's ready when the shell is a bright red color and the tail is curled.

24 SEVEN SIT ON IT, SHAKESPEARE!

'Taming of the Shrew' goes 'Happy Days' in Brooklyn Bridge Park

By Matthew Perlman shrewd performance is coming to Brooklyn's front lawn.

Random Access Theatre is staging a 1950s-tinged production of Shakespeare's "The Taming of the Shrew" at Brooklyn Bridge Park from July 18-20. The retro twist is intended to draw out questions about the treatment of women in the classic work, explained one of the organizers.

"We're not shying away from the darker content," said Jennifer Sandella, the theater group's artistic director. "We want to be really honest about the text, looking at it through a modern lens."

The main controversy in Shakespeare's play centers around the character Petruchio, who is trying to make his wife Katherina more obedient. To a modern audience, this story line often feels misogynistic and demeaning to women. But by using a wardrobe from the 1950s, when women were still struggling for basic rights of equality with men, Sandella said the Random Access production finds a parallel that makes the conversation more textured

"It felt so appropriate," said Sandella, about setting the play in post-war America. "Kate is trying to be strong and independent in a world where that's not available to her."

The play also casts all of the servant roles as women, a departure from the Bard's original script. This decision plays with a concept often ingrained in Shakespearean works that the servants are actually smarter than the people in power, Sandella said.

"It highlights what we're trying to say about the time," she said.

But for all the heavy politicking behind the curtains of this production, Sandella said the troupe's production is still light-hearted.

"It's a comedy for a reason," she said. "It's not tragedy,"

This is the third year Random Access is presenting a free outdoors play in Brooklyn Bridge Park. And for Sandella, who lives nearby in Brooklyn Heights, the production gives her a chance to feel connected to her neighborhood.

"It's something we really love to do," she said. "It's a nice change of pace to feel like we're part of a bigger community."

NEW WORLD STAGES N 340 West 50th St. New York, NY

STANDING Brooklyn's Biggest Booster by Joanna DelBuono

New prez for Physical Therapy Assoc.

MIDWOOD

Put your hands together for Dr. Michael Mattia, the new president-elect of the New York Physical Therapy Association.

The physical therapist with hands of gold has been helping improve the lives of hospital patients for more than 20 years. In 2013 he was the recipient of a heart award presented by his peers in recognition for his compassion, dedication and ability to work well with others, as well as his advocacy on behalf of all physical therapists.

Our pal Michael will preside over approximately 5,000 licensed physical therapists, assistants, and students. He is a graduate of the State University of New York and City University of New York in Brooklyn, he received his doctorate from Temple University in 2006, and he holds a master's degree in hospital administration from Ohio University and a master in science from Long Island University.

Michael has served for several years as legislative liaison for the New York Physical Therapist's Association's Brooklyn-Staten Island Chapter and has been a chairman on its advisory panel on legislation since 2011. In addition to working at Mount Sinai Beth Israel Brooklyn, he is the founder and chief executive officer of Mattia Physical Rehabilitation, and an adjunct professor at the College of Staten Island and Kingsborough Community College.

BROOKLYN HEIGHTS

Put out the welcome mat

Greetings to Amelia Wilson. Standing O pal was elected to the Board of Directors at the Brooklyn Bridge Park Conservancy last month.

Nancy Bowe, chairwoman of the Conservancy, was delighted with the selection.

"It is our pleasure to welcome Amelia to the Conservancy's team," she said. "Her fresh perspective, energy, and enthusiasm will greatly enrich our efforts to support Brooklyn Bridge Park."

Amelia — who originally hails from Australia, where she received a Bachelor of Laws Degree from Queensland University of Technology — is now a true-blue Brooklynite through and through.

In 2011, she founded Armstrong Wilson Advisory, where she advises nonprofit or-Set sail and anchors aweigh to Patrick Coen, a 2014 Xaverian High School graduate appointed to the U.S. Naval Academy, where he plans on studying engineering.

This seafaring young gent headed down to Annapolis in Maryland last month to begin his plebe year — that's brand-new incoming sailor to you and me. Patrick was also accepted to the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, but the call of the sea was far greater than the call of the infantry. The National Merit Scholarship finalist was also accepted to University of Notre Dame, Manhattan College, Fordham University, Binghamton University, and Rensselaer Polytechnic University. Hey, this is one smart, aspiring sailor.

Standing O salutes Patrick, and wishes him this toast, "May you always have sturdy sea legs, calm seas, and a bright star to guide you home."

An active member of the community, she also serves on committees for the Brooklyn Kindergarten Society, the Brooklyn Public Library, and the historic Plymouth Church. The woman of the hour is thrilled with her new post.

"I am delighted to join the Conservancy's board, and look forward to being a part of the effort to steward our own, worldclass, Brooklyn Bridge Park," she said.

Welcome to the chair

Standing O welcomes Sister Elizabeth Hill, alumna and former president of St. Joseph's College, as the new chairwoman of Bishop Kearney High School.

Stand and cheer for budding Bensonhurst philanthropist Eldin Feratovic, winner of a 32BJ Union scholarship, which is presented to the sons and daughters of union members.

Eldin, a former student at La-Guardia High School for Music and Arts in Manhattan, helped to organize fund-raisers that elevated awareness about human trafficking and child marriages in Uganda, and raised more than $5,000 to send girls to schools in Africa. The fundraising scholar was able to do all the above and still maintain a 90 average in class.

Eldin advanced his goal to be a humanitarian by spending summer vacations in Montenegro, his father's homeland, and helping to rebuild roads and address other quality of life issues.

"Sanitation in Montenegro is anything but sanitary," says Eldin, who will attend Baruch College in the fall. "Garbage lines the roads and doubles as fencing for some villagers' homes."

Sister Kearney said the school looked forward to a wonderful partnership with Sister Elizabeth and the board, and with new president Dr. Margaret Minson and new principal Elizabeth Guglielmo.

Sister Elizabeth graduated from Columbia University and from St. John's University School of Law. She worked as a staff attorney in the Catholic migration office in Brooklyn and served as an executive assistant to St. Joseph's previous president, Sr. George Aquin O'Connor, from 1980 to 1997. In 2014, Sr. Elizabeth was the recipient of the prestigious Lifetime Achievement Award by the Long Island Association.

Standing O wishes Sister Elizabeth a long and happy seat!

Brooklyn Nets catch Hollins as new coach

No Kidd-ing! Says he just wants to lead court-side, not in back office

BY JOSEPH STASZEWSKI

Lionel Hollins was taken back by seeing his picture displayed boldly and proudly outside the Barclays Center as he arrived to be introduced as the Brooklyn Nets' new head coach.

"I'm very low maintenance," Hollins said. "I'm actually embarrassed. I drove up and saw the big billboard with my picture on it."

It was a quick reminder of why he wanted to be in Brooklyn. The 60-year-old expressed at a press conference on Monday how happy he was to be with a Nets organization and an owner like Mikhail Prokhorov, who has shown he is willing to use his money and resources to win. The New York market was enticing to him, and he feels it will be to free agents as well.

"When you start looking at the whole package, it becomes a very exciting opportunity and I'm looking forward to it," Hollins said.

His hiring gives the Nets its fourth coach in the last four seasons. It also puts an end to a hectic two weeks. Former coach Jason Kidd, after just one season, reportedly pushed to be in charge of the team's entire basketball operations. His request was denied and he left to coach the Milwaukee Bucks. Hollins wants no part of any added responsibility or power.

"I'm a basketball coach," he said. "I don't want to do Billy's job. I don't want to do anybody else's job in the organization other than the one that I'm hired to do."

In a time where NBA teams are hiring former players to coach fresh out of their sneakers, Hollins brings 20 years of NBA coaching experience after playing 10 seasons in the league. He was most recently the head coach of the Memphis Grizzlies from 2009 to 2013. In his final season, he led Memphis to 56 wins and the organization's first trip to the Western Conference finals, but philosophical differences between him and the front office kept him from being brought back.

"What always stood out about Lionel was his team's win," said Nets general manager Billy King said.

Hollins was in the mix for the Nets job when Kidd was hired last offseason, but didn't earn an interview. This time, King felt Hollins was the best fit and moved quickly to land him. King sees him as tough coach, who fits his style of play to his roster and has a proven track record from this time in Memphis of developing young players. Hollins coached under Cotton Fitzsimmons and Paul Westphal in Phoenix and played for Hall of Fame coaches Billy Cunningham, Chuck Daly and Jack Ramsey. "He's been around a lot of great basketball minds," King said. "He's been able to take that in and turn himself into a good coach."

The Nets roster is still in flux after going 44-38 and reaching the Eastern Conference semifinals. Core players Deron Williams, fresh off ankle surgery, Brook Lopez, who missed most of last season with a broken foot, and guard Joe Johnson are set to return. Brooklyn is waiting on decisions from free agents Paul Pierce and Shawn Livingston. Forward Kevin Garnett has a vear left on his contract, but could opt to retire or ask to be traded.

Hollins has briefly talked to Williams, but has not reached out to rest of the players just yet. He said he'll leave negotiations with Pierce to King, but what anyone on the Nets roster can expect from their new coach is as simple as Hollins himself.

"If they are out watching they know I'm going to be straight with them, be consistent with them," Hollins said. "We are going to have fun, work hard, and we are going to win."

Lincoln's Moore closes career with Wingate Award

BY JOSEPH STASZEWSKI

Javon Moore still doesn't look like a quarterback, but that's only before the ball is hiked into his hands.

The 5-foot-8 Abraham Lincoln senior said when he first put on cleats for his Brooklyn Renegades youth team, he played wide receiver and corner back. But the next season, the coach — Moore's cousin — recognized his strong arm and placed him under center, where he has been ever since.

"There was no going back," he said. "I forgot how to tackle. I forgot how to catch. There was nothing else but quarterback."

Abraham Lincoln was just fine with that. Railsplitters coach Shawn O'Connor remembers Moore as a seventh grader at a camp he helped run. He was one of the smallest kids on the field, but also one of the toughest. "He competed in everything that he did there," O'Connor said. "He just wanted to win."

That's exactly what he did in a Railsplitters uniform. Moore, who will attend Morrisville State College in the fall, was on two city-championship teams and was the most valuable player in this year's title game, while playing on a severely sprained ankle. He also earned the Wingate Award, given by the Public School Athletic League to the best student athlete in each of its sports.

"It's an honor to get an award and be recognized for all the things that I did this year, and all the things that my team did."

What Moore did was throw 29 touchdowns and amass 2,090 passing yards. He did so as receivers Malik Andrews and Carlos Stewart got better Continued on page 58 B G

Aberdeen 3 Cyclones 2

July 4, at MCU Park Mets pitcher Dillon Gee dominated all six innings of his second rehab appearance at MCU Park against the Aberdeen Ironbirds, but his fellow Cyclones did not back him up.

Gee struck out 10 batters, gave up three hits and one run, and walked only one.

Josh Prevost came in to relieve Gee in the seventh but Aberdeen's batters got the better of him. Prevost pitched two innings, striking out just one and giving up two goals.

Cyclone sluggers rallied in the top of the ninth when Jeff Diehl replaced designated hitter Tyler Moore and smashed a double that scored Jhoan Urena, but it couldn't keep the Cyclones from dropping their fourthstraight match.

Clones' fifth straight loss.

The Cyclones did a complete 180 during Sunday's game, redeeming themselves after a crushing loss against the Aberdeen Ironbirds the previous night.

PERFECT PITCH: Gaither Bumgardner pitched four perfect innings on July 6.

The Clones pitching was back on point, as Carlos Valdez made it through five innings giving up only two hits, striking out six, and walking only one batter. Gaither Bumgardner got the ball in the fourth and pitched four perfect innings, giving up nary a hit and striking out four batters. Bumgardner also got the save.

The bats finally woke up for the Clones, too, bringing in 7 goals on 13 hits. Tucker Tharp started it off in the fourth inning with a single to right, and Brooklyn's home-team continued to play small ball to score three in the fourth and four in the sixth. Jeff Diehl also extended his hit streak to 10 straight games.

July 7 at MCU Park

The Cyclones and the Renegades picked up a rainedout July 2 game where they left it, in the top of the second inning with two outs and the Renegades in the lead 1–0. The reboot wasn't pretty for the Cyclones.

Starting pitcher Octavio Acosta gave up six runs on five hits, while striking out three. He gave up a home run in the sixth inning to Hunter Lockwood, but stayed in the game into the seventh. The Cyclones had a lackluster day at the plate, seeing only two productive innings. In the fourth, Tomas Nido singled to center before Jhoan Urena brought him around with a two runblast, putting the Clones in the lead 2-1. The next inning also saw a couple of runs for the Mini-Mets, this time with the help of good old-fashioned small ball. After Will Fulmer reached base on a fielder's choice. Dimas Ponce was hit by a pitch and left the game with a sore hand. Amed Rosario came in to pinch run, and after a wild pitch moved him and Fulmer over, a single up the middle by Nido scored them both.

But then the Mini-Mets fell apart, starting with the Renegades' homer in the sixth and continuing with Hudson Valley goals in the seventh, eighth, and ninth.

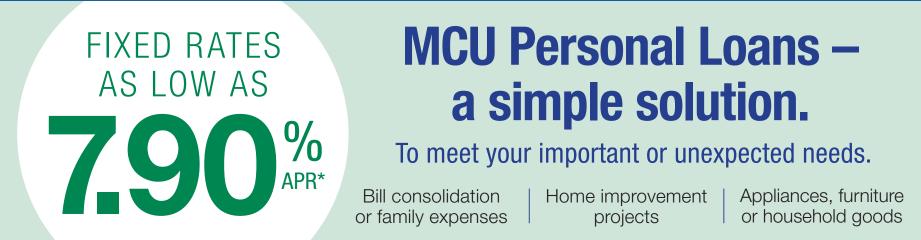

The Cyclones and Renegades faced off a second time that night for a seveninning makeup game, and completed the grueling four-game slog with a doubleheader the next morning.

Cyclones 3 Hudson Valley 2 July 7 at MCU Park

The Cyclones redeemed themselves after dropping the first game of the evening's doubleheader, squeaking out a win in seven innings thanks to dominant pitching from Corey Oswalt and a basesclearing double from Michael Katz.

Oswalt tossed six complete innings, walked only two batters, struck out seven, and allowed just two runs, one unearned, on four hits. Shane Bay came in for the seventh and struck out the side, giving up only one hit for his fifth save of the season.

The Clones' big inning came in the fifth when Luis Arrizurieta drew a lead off walk, Tucker Tharp hit a double that got Arrizurieta to third, Ahmed Rosario walked to load the bases, and Michael Katz finished it off with a double.

All-Brooklyn baseball honors

М

BY JOSEPH STASZEWSKI Poly Prep and Xaverian penned title runs of historic proportions in what was another fine baseball season in Brooklyn.

The Blue Devils excelled with an experienced group that had great senior leadership. They became the first school to win a fourthstraight private school state title. Xaverian's path to its first Catholic Class AA crown since 2011 wasn't quite as easy. It had to win seven elimination games along the way.

A second-straight crown wasn't to be for Telecommunications in the Public School Athletic League. Grand Street reached its fourth-straight semifinals after up-and-coming Midwood wrestled the division crown away. Nazareth also showed it has a bright future by making the Catholic A final in its first season back in the league.

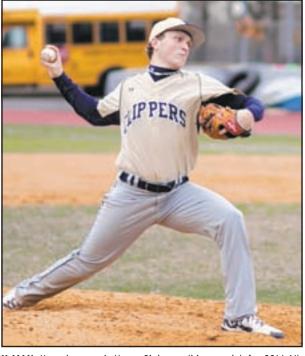

Here are the players who helped make these moments happen and are considered Brooklyn's best:

All-Brooklyn Player of the Year: Anthony Sigismondi, Xaverian

The senior refused to believe this was just a rebuilding season from the start, and he made sure it wasn't. The smart and gritty Sigismondi won three playoff games, including the semifinal and championship clinchers. He went 10–3 overall with a 1.20 ERA and 52 strikeouts. Sigismondi isn't the hardest throw, but that never stopped him from controlling lineups.

All-Brooklyn Coach of the Year: Frank Del-George, Xaverian

DelGeorge called 2014 a rebuilding year after losing 17 seniors and returning a talented but inexperienced roster. It took the pressure off and allowed the Clippers' skipper and his staff time to cultivate this group. He demanded the best from them and eventually got it as Xaverian went on to win the city title in his second season at the helm.

All-Brooklyn First Team:

Pitcher Rob Amato, Xaverian

Amato was one of the most feared pitchers in the Catholic league. The junior went 5–2 with a 0.94 ERA and 66 strikeouts in 60 innings. He fanned nine in a playoff win over Salesian and won the opener of the final.

Catcher Rob Calabrese, Poly Prep

Calabrese posted a .432 batting average with 30 RBI and his cannon arm shut down opponents' running games. What can't be measured is the effectiveness of his overall leadership and smarts while leading Poly to a fourth-straight crown.

Catcher Marcus Chavez, Grand Street Campus The super sophomore proved to be just that. Chavez had a breakout season, hitting .581, posting an on-base percentage of .673 and slugging seven doubles. He had three hits and three RBI in a big win over Telecom.

Pitcher Alex Cuas, Grand Street Campus

The hard-throwing senior was a major reason for the Wolves' success. Cuas, who has a high-80s fastball, was a perfect 5–0 during the regular season with a 0.41 ERA. He also thrived when called upon to close.

Pitcher Andrew Ehrenberg, Poly Prep

The junior seamlessly stepped into the role of ace with Morgan Gray missing time with an injury. Ehrenberg went 7–0 with a 0.79 ERA and 36 strikeouts. He got out of a bases-loaded jam in relief in the title game.

Pitcher Ian Miller, Berkeley Carroll The Harvard-bound

The Harvard-bound

Miller remained one of the city's top pitchers. His lone defeat came at the hands of Poly Prep during another stellar season on the mound. The senior was also one of the Lions' best hitters and run producers.

Shortstop Richie Palacios, Berkeley Carroll

The junior was as steady as they come at the plate and in the field. Palacios made just three errors all season at short, and kickedstarted the offense in the leadoff spot. He hit .345 with a .440 on-base percentage.

Shortstop Anthony Prato, Poly Prep

The sophomore was instant offense and a sure fielder at shortstop. The speedy and athletic Prato was the catalyst to Poly's attack as the leadoff hitter. He batted .449 with 17 RBI, 40 runs scored, and 32 stolen bases.

First baseman Austin Ruiz, Telecommunications

Ruiz provided plenty of pop for Telecom. The junior batted .444 with 21 runs scored and a team-leading 27 RBI. Ruiz was also fine fielder at first, and an emotional and vocal leader for the Yellow Jackets.

Third baseman Anthony Scotti, Xaverian

Scotti was one of the city's top leadoff hitters, constantly on base by any means necessary. The junior hit 375 and stole 28 bases for the Clippers. He quietly went about his business and was a big reason Xaverian claimed the city title.

Shortstop and Pitcher Milo Sklar, Midwood

Sklar flew under the radar most of his career, but gained recognition as Midwood excelled this season. The senior hit .383 with 22 runs, scored 14 RBI and five doubles. He also grabbed two wins on the mound.

Thanks Jason: Nets better off with Hollins ear Mr. Kidd, How's Milwaukee? I hear it's nice up there. I hope you have time to check out the Third Ward, go to a Brewers baseball game and visit the Harley Davidson Museum. Back in Brooklyn, we're doing just fine.

On behalf of Brooklyn Nets fans, I just want to take the time to send you this thank you note and wish you well. You have again made us a better organization. The first time it was by playing for us and leading the Nets to consecutive trips to the NBA Finals. This time it was by leaving and taking your ego to Milwaukee. It opened the door for Lionel Hollins to become our coach. You won't be missed here in Brooklyn. Hollins is a breath of fresh air and, in my opinion, a better coach. He has 20 years of experience and comes off as a straight-shooting and well-mannered man. Hollins took the small market Memphis Grizzlies to the Western Conference finals in 2013. Imagine what he might do in the weak Eastern Conference.

Shipping you to Milwaukee also allowed the Nets to acquire second round draft picks in 2015 and 2019. Those are precious in this market. Nets and Knicks fans have seen plenty sent away over the years, but actually acquiring them? Wow. Thank you again for helping us to invest in our future.

I give you credit. You have a history of getting what you want, whether it was who was coaching you, who you were coaching with, and now who you will be actually coaching.

By asking for more power in the Nets organization and to leapfrog general manager Billy King, it meant more power, prestige, security, and likely money if owner Mikhail Prokhorov had agreed to it. If denied, you'd land softly on your feet with pal and new Bucks owner and former financial advisor Marc Lasry. All the backstabbing and back dealing also cost former Bucks coach Larry Drew his job in a most unprofessional manor. Bravo.

Unlike you, the humble Hollins just wants to coach, and flat out said so. He is happy for the opportunity so few in this world get. Hollins isn't a headline stealer. He was embarrassed to have his face plastered on the Barclays Center's video billboard. Still, his press conference was a night at the Improve compared to the blandness you brought each time you were behind a microphone.

The Nets are better as an organization today than they were two weeks ago thanks to your departure. Best of luck in Milwaukee, and don't worry about us in Brooklyn. We will be sure to thank you once again next time you're in town.

around him and because of him. Moore also ran for 544 yards and four more scores. His two touchdowns and 191-yard performance on a bad ankle in the city final was the highlight of the season.

"He makes things happen," O'Connor said.

He had a solid outing representing New York City in the Empire Challenge senior all-star game on June 25 at Hofstra University. Moore carried the ball four times for 37 yards and completed three of five passes for 24 more in New York City's 24–18 loss to Long Island. He has already more than proven himself, especially after his senior season. The size of his heart was the only thing that mattered.

"People always looked down on him because of his size his whole life," O'Connor said. "He epitomizes what we want to be about in this game."

How can 155,886 households in Brooklyn help your business?

CNG's newspapers, Courier-Life, The Brooklyn Paper and Caribbean Life, have been an important part of the Brooklyn advertising landscape for decades. Our weekly newspapers let you target a specific neighborhood or reach all parts of the borough with your advertising message. And with the borough's largest household coverage, that's a lot of Brooklyn!

If that's not enough, we can spread your message outside of Brooklyn with CNG's Queens, Bronx and Manhattan newspapers.

Give us a call at 718-260-2510. You'll speak with a CNG advertising professional who can help you develop a plan that's right for you.

Leticia James Warns Consumers About Classified Ads Toll numbers may be a direct line to trouble. Classified ads are intended to help people by facilitatcommunication and ing advertising available services; however, some of the hotlines & service numbers in classifieds actually hurt the people who rely on them by cheating them of hard-earned dollars. their "Most newspapers print a disclaimer in their classified ad section to warn readers about numbers that are a direct line to trouble. Any number starting with 900, 540, 595 or 871 charges a fee beyond a local call. In some instances, ads initial ly advertise calls to a local number, but then direct callers to a second number starting with one of the paid exchanges. "Consumers must also question the legitimacy of vague classifieds because the too could be a scam. Be fore responding to an ad, consumers should verify the source of all information & always be wary about sending money or signing a contract with an unknown party?
