Dollars down the drain

City could waste millions if it builds water-storage tunnel instead of long-planned lanes along canal

By Julianne Cuba

The city may spend upwards of $3 billion to build a tunnel instead of long-planned sewage tunnels along the Gowanus Canal — a project that could take at least six years to complete.

Officials already spent roughly $3 million on design work for the water-storage tunnels — infrastructure costs that remain in place even if the city chooses to abandon the project.

“About $3 million,” De- partment of Environmental Protection employee Kevin Clarke said, echoing the city leaders who propose to kill the project.

“We don’t have an exact dollar figure,” he said. “We do believe the headhouse associated with the tun- nel would be about the same size, but there will be less, below-ground facilities because of the public space, so we can come to more flexible with the design.”

But, the city is still planning for construction:“It’s a very similar project,” Clarke said.

The Department of Environmental Protection used an innovative plan of adding a filtration machine named “Naomie” for another project.

The tunnel would operate similarly to the tunnels, by collecting wastewater and liquid waste from local areas that are filtered through the headhouse, which would otherwise flow the canal drain- age system.

But it could hold at least 16 million gallons — four times more than the tunnels — and could only be extended fur- ther to collect even more, ac- cording to Clark.

The city may extend the chute down Second Avenue or fur- ther along the canal.

“There are several alternatives to be studied,” Clarke said.

The city has already done on the tanks is $43 million, including $17 million that was spent on the Gowanus Community Advisory Group’s project.

“But it could hold at least 16 million gallons — four times more than the tunnels — and could only be extended fur- ther to collect even more, ac- cording to Clark,” he said.

Wouters does not yet have a detailed map of the canals, but believes the city may extend the same year officials ex- pected to finish installing the tun- nel’s price tag coming in at $1.2 billion, with the tun- nel’s price tag coming in at $1.2 billion, with the tun- nel’s price tag coming in at $1.2 billion, with the tun- nel’s price tag coming in at $1.2 billion.

And some of the prep work already done on the tanks is not applicable should the city move forward with the tun- nel, construction of which would not start until 2030.

The architect’s scheme would still require tempo- rary roads — infrastructure aswa- yers may still bury the smaller, eight-milion-gallon tank, which would increase storage capacity, but there will no longer be below-ground facilities because of the public space, Clarke said.

“Benefits of the tunnel is its increases storage capacity,” Clarke said.

The city leaders said they hope the tunnel could be below-ground facilities be- low-ground facilities because of the public space, Clarke said.

Cops caught a man on Jan. 18 for shoplifting from The Manhattan Toy Store and punching an employee.

The 19-year-old suspect was leaving the store near Flatbush Avenue between 2:30 and 5:30 pm when an employee tried to stop him by punching him in the eye, according to authorities.

The suspect ran away from the store and cops caught him in the Brooklyn Hall transit station, police said.

A 23-year-old man was a bag bandit and had been on the run in a public bathroom inside an Atlantic Avenue building on Jan. 19, police said.

The victim told cops he had his bag — which included earbuds, voice recorder, and sunglasses — on a rack in the bathroom at 4:30 pm while he was in a private stall. When he came out five minutes later, it was gone, said cops.

The victim told police he was using the facilities at the location between Fifth and Sixth streets at 1:30 pm when the other man kicked him, cutting his helmet off and shutting him to Park Slope’s Methodist Hospital.

The man told police his attackers were a complete stranger, and he has no idea who performed the assault, cops said.
